is well founded. The defendant's agent when he received the message knew, or should have known, that the message would not be promptly delivered, on account of the fact that the receiving office was closed during the hours of the night. The message was filed for immediate transmission and delivery, and its urgency and importance appeared on its face. The sender had the right to assume that, as the message was received by the company for immediate transmission, if there existed any reasons why it could not be promptly delivered, information thereof would be then given so that other means could be adopted. The agent of the company had no right to assume that the sender of so urgent a message knew of the necessary delay incident to awaiting the opening of the receiving office the next day, and he therefore was not justified in withholding or failing to give information that there would necessarily be considerable delay in sending the message. The rule is, we think, well established by the authorities that "if a telegraph company is unable, through a disarrangement of its lines or other cause, to do what it makes a business of doing, it must inform those who wish to employ it of the fact, and thus acquaint them with the advantage of employing other means." Gray on Communication by Telegraph, § 18; Tel. Co. v. Fleischner, 66 Fed. 899, 14 C. C. A. 166; Swan v. Tel. Co., 129 Fed. 318, 63 C. C. A. 550, 67 L. R. A. 153; W. U. Tel. v. Bruner (Tex.) 19 S. W. 149. The same principle is stated in another place as follows: "Where, from any cause it is impossible to transmit the message, or where considerable delay will be necessary, and the operator is aware of the fact when the message is offered him, it is his duty to inform the sender, particularly when the message shows on its face the necessity or importance of its being speedily transmitted." 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 1026. This principle, we think, demands that where the company's transmitting agent knows, or under the circumstances should know, that on account of the closure of the receiving office there will be delay in delivering an urgent message which is intended for immediate delivery, it is incumbent on him to so inform the sender; and, if he fails to do so, the company is liable for damages resulting from such neglect.

The further question then arises whether or not the transmitting agent is bound to take notice of the office hours at the receiving office. The evidence in this case is silent on the question as to whether or not the Little Rock agent knew that the Perry office was, in accordance with the rules, not open at night. This question is not free from doubt, and there is little authority on the subject. Judge Thompson in his work on Negligence (volume 2, § 2402) states his conclusion to be that the agent of the company ought to be held bound to know the rules of other offices with respect to office hours. We think this is the sound and just view of the matter, and that any other rule would work an injustice to those who deal with telegraph companies. It appears to us to be conveniently within the power of the company to furnish its agents with information as to the rules of various offices with respect to the hours within which messages may be received and delivered. In addition to this it is within the power of one of the agents, when he receives a message for immediate transmission, to ascertain by inquiry over the lines whether the receiving office is at that time open for the receipt of messages, so that he can give the necessary information to the sender.

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the facts of the case justify a recovery of damages by the plaintiff, so the judgment is affirmed.

1. WITNESSES (§ 32*)—FEES—TAXATION—NECESSITY FOR PROVING ACCOUNT—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

A witness in a civil case cannot have his fees for attendance and mileage taxed against the losing party, unless he proves his account in compliance with Kirby's Dig. § 3524, providing that every account for attendance of a witness shall be sworn to, and shall state that he was summoned to attend as a witness in the cause on which the charge is made, and the number of days he attended, and, if summoned without the limits of the county, the number of miles he traveled in consequence of the summons; the statute applying to civil as well as criminal cases.

losing party, without having, in the time and manner provided by statute, proved his account therefor. The statute is as follows: "Every account for attendance of a witness shall be sworn to, and shall state that he was summoned to attend as a witness in the cause upon which the charge is made, and the number of days he attended, and if summoned without the limits of the county, the number of miles he traveled in consequence of the summons." Section 3524, Kirby's Dig. This court in Fulks v. State, 64 Ark. 148, 41 S. W. 54, held that a witness in a criminal case could not have his fees taxed unless he proved same in the manner and within the time prescribed by the statute. The statute applies equally to civil and criminal cases. It was shown in evidence in the present case that it had always been the prevailing custom in Cross county, where the case was pending, for witnesses to report to the clerk verbally the number of days' attendance, without making out an account and swearing to it, as provided by the statute. This alleged custom does not alter the rights of the parties, nor prevent the operation of the statute. Parties, witnesses, and officers are all presumed to know of the existence of this statute, and it cannot be abrogated by custom.

Reversed and remanded, with directions for further proceedings on the motion to retax costs not inconsistent with this opinion.

SCROGGIN v. RIDLING.

TAXATION (§ 534*)—PAYMENT OF TAXES—MISTAKE OF COLLECTOR—EFFECT.

The owner of land offered to pay the taxes thereon, and he gave a correct description of it to the collector who made a mistake in describing it, thereby omitting 40 acres. The owner was unable to tell from the tax receipt that a mistake was made, and he supposed that his receipt was correct, and paid the amount of taxes claimed to be due. Held, that a sale of the 40 acres for taxes was void under the rule that a bona fide attempt to pay all the taxes frustrated by the mistake of the collector is equivalent to actual payment.

Appeal from Conway Chancery Court; Jeremiah G. Wallace, Chancellor.

Suit by O. O. Scroggin against H. L. Ridling. From a decree for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Sellers & Sellers, for appellant. Wm. L. Moore, for appellee.

HART, J. O. O. Scroggin brought suit in ejectment in the Conway circuit court against H. L. Ridling to recover possession of the N. E. ¼ of the N. E. ¼ of section 20, township 8 N., range 16 W., in Conway county, Ark. He relied on a tax title to maintain his action. Ridling filed his answer and motion to transfer the cause to the chancery court, in which he set up that he had attempted to pay the taxes in apt time, but that through the mistake or fault of the collector of taxes the land was not properly described in the tax receipt given him, and that he did not discover the mistake until the present suit was brought. Ridling asked that he be allowed to redeem the land, and that a decree be entered canceling Scroggin's tax deed as a cloud upon his title. By consent the cause was transferred to the chancery court, and the chancellor found the issue in favor of Ridling, allowing him to redeem upon payment of $5, the taxes, penalty, and costs, for which the land was sold. Thereupon Ridling offered to pay to Scroggin said sum of $5, which was refused in open court, and a decree was entered canceling Scroggin's tax deed as a cloud upon Ridling's title. Scroggin has appealed to this court.

The sole question raised by the appeal is as to the validity of the tax title of Scroggin. It is conceded that a bona fide attempt to pay all the taxes frustrated by the mistake or fault of the collector is equivalent to actual payment, and this was the rule announced in the case of Gunn v. Thompson, 70 Ark. 500, 69 S. W. 261. We think the facts of this case bring it within the rule. Ridling received a deed for the land in 1902, and in 1903 he got some one to go to the collector's office to pay the taxes for him. In 1904 he went himself to the collector to pay the taxes, but did not have the deeds with him. He wished to pay taxes on 180 acres of land, and gave the description of it to Albert Stover, deputy collector in the sheriff's office. Ridling testifies as follows: "I told him beginning at the northeast corner of the section with the Fonville land, the Fonville 40 at the northeast corner. Then I told him going three-fourths of a mile south, the next 40 the house was on, and the 40 still south of that, and then beginning at the section line and running east and west north of these three 40's and running one-quarter and one-half quarter south." The Fonville 40 is the one in controversy. Ridling further stated that he could not tell from examining the tax receipt whether or not it correctly described the land, and that he did not even have sufficient education to discover the mistake by comparing the tax receipt with his deed. He supposed his tax receipt was correct, and paid taxes on the land during 10 subsequent years, until this suit was brought, not knowing that it had been sold for taxes. The suit was commenced September 21, 1908. The collector made a plat of the 180 acres from the description given him by Ridling. All the land described except the 40 acres in controversy was correctly written in the tax receipt. Ridling's description began with the 40 acres in controversy, and the other lands were described with reference to it. No mistake having been made with reference to them shows that the mistake was made through the fault of the collector. Ridling correctly described the land to the collector, and in good faith paid him the amount of taxes claimed to be due.

We think the facts uphold the finding of the chancellor, and it is ordered that the decree be affirmed.

Battle, J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Nevada Chancery Court; Jas. D. Shaver, Chancellor.

Suit by H. V. Scott against G. R. Blake, in which the City of Prescott was made a party. From a decree for plaintiff against defendant Blake, and a dismissal of the action against the City of Prescott, defendant Blake appeals. Affirmed.

Hamby & Haynie, for appellant. H. B. McKenzie, for City of Prescott.

FRAUENTHAL, J. The plaintiff below, H. V. Scott, instituted this suit against the defendant, G. R. Blake, upon an account for building a concrete sidewalk and curb. In effect, it was an action for a balance claimed due upon the account. The total amount due for the walk and curb was $273.90, and upon that the defendant had paid $132.45, leaving a balance of $145.45, for the recovery of which amount this suit was brought. The defendant denied that he had employed the plaintiff to build the sidewalk and curb, but had only employed him to build the walk; that the cost of the walk amounted to $132.45, which he had paid; and that the balance of $141.45 was the cost of the curb for which he claimed that he was not liable. In his answer he also alleged that some years before the building of this walk and curb the city of Prescott had dug a ditch in front of his property and graded up the street at that place, and thereby made an elevation in front of his property and next the street, which extended in depth from 12 inches to 3 feet from the top of the sidewalk to the bottom of the ditch, and that the plaintiff built a wall or curb of that depth in front of the sidewalk, and that this suit is for the price thereof. He claimed that he did not employ plaintiff to build the wall or curb, that the necessity for building same was created by the city of Prescott in digging the said ditch and elevating the grade of the sidewalk, and that the city of Prescott was on this account liable for the price of building the wall or curb. He asked that the city of Prescott be made a party to the suit, which was done. The city of Prescott filed its answer, in effect, denying that it had made any contract with any one for the doing of the work which was involved in the suit, and denied that it was in any manner liable therefor. Thereupon the circuit court of its own motion, and without any objection made by any party to the suit, transferred the action to the chancery court. The chancery court without objection of any of the parties assumed jurisdiction of the cause and proceeded to trial of the case. It rendered a judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendant, Blake, for the amount of the claim, and dismissed the action as against the city of Prescott. Blake prosecutes this appeal.

It appears from the evidence that the defendant, Blake, owned a lot situated in a block along which the city of Prescott by ordinance required sidewalks to be built by the various owners of the lots. The lot of defendant was quite low, and some years prior to the building of this sidewalk the city of Prescott had dug a ditch and raised the grade before defendant's property as set out in his said above answer. The plaintiff was engaged in building sidewalks along the block for other owners of lots, and in building such walks he also built for the other owners the curb or retaining wall in the front of such walks down to the bottom of the ditch, for all of which work these other owners were paying. When, in doing this work, for the other owners, the plaintiff was near to the property of the defendant, the defendant requested the plaintiff to proceed and do the work of building the walk before his property as he was doing for the other owners; and about the only other definite understanding the parties had was as to the terms of payment. Nothing was definitely said as to the exact amount or extent of the work. In order to build the sidewalk, it was necessary to build the curb or wall as a part thereof so as to retain the earth upon which the walk rested, and the top of the curb became also a part of the walk. Upon receiving request from defendant to build the sidewalk in front of his property, the plaintiff began with building the curb or wall, and the defendant was present and saw the plaintiff doing every part of the work. The only person or authority that requested the plaintiff to do the work was the defendant, Blake, and it was only at his request that the plaintiff proceeded to do any of the work, and only at defendant's request that he did the entire work. This the defendant knew, and, if he did not expect or intend to pay for the work of building the curb or wall, he did not make any statement to that effect to plaintiff. In the progress of the work the defendant, Blake, made payments from time to time to plaintiff; and, after the entire work of building the curb or wall and walk had been completed, and the plaintiff presented his claim for the balance due on said entire work, the defendant for the first time told the plaintiff that he thought the city of Prescott should pay for the curb or wall, and suggested that plaintiff sue the defendant, Blake, and said city for the cost of the curb or wall, and whatever the court said he would do.

The plaintiff claims that he understood from the agreement of his employment by defendant that he was to do the work of building the walk and curb or wall as constituting the sidewalk in the same manner as he was doing for the other owners at the time of the employment by defendant, and that defendant, and only the defendant, was to pay for the entire work. The defendant, Blake, contends that he thought it was the duty of the city of Prescott to pay for the work of building the curb or wall, and that the city would pay therefor and not he; and on that account made no mention relative thereto. The right of the plaintiff to recover herein against the defendant, Blake, is determined by the contract which he made with Blake, either express or implied. The liability of Blake is not diminished or affected by any act done or ordinance passed by the city of Prescott, if he is liable for the indebtedness sued for, and that liability is solely dependent upon his own acts and contract. It is contended by defendant, Blake, that the city of Prescott had dug a ditch before his property, and had in grading the sidewalk raised a high embankment, and thus had made the work in the front of his property so unequal that it was not uniform with like work required of other owners, and, on this account, the ordinance of that city requiring him to lay sidewalks could not require him to build this curb or retaining wall. But, if that contention should be deemed to be correct, it would only be a defense to Blake in resisting the enforcement of that ordinance. If, on the other hand, he did not resist the enforcement of the ordinance, but proceeded to comply with its requirements and to build his sidewalk, and contracted with the plaintiff to do the work, then his liability to plaintiff could not be affected by any act done by the city of Prescott. In fact, the city of Prescott was not a necessary or proper party to this suit. It was not a party to the alleged contract between plaintiff and Blake, and was not in privity therewith. It could not, therefore, be held liable in any action based upon such a contract. 7 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 113. The rights of the parties herein are founded and rest upon the contract that was made between the plaintiff and Blake, and solely upon that contract. The uncertainty of these rights, if there is any uncertainty, grows out of the dispute in the testimony as to scope of that contract, and to the failure of the parties when making the contract to specifically name its extent and scope in express language. When a contract is entered into, it is either express in its terms or its terms may be implied from the acts, conduct, and express words of the contract. To form the agreement of the parties it is essential that there should be a distinct intention that is common to both. But the intention of the parties need not be express. It may be implied from the acts and words used, and the law will impute to the parties an intention which the meaning of their words and acts reasonably import.

In Freeman v. Cook, 2 Exch. 654, 18 L. J. Exch. 114, that rule is formulated as follows: "If, whatever a man's intention may be, he so conducts himself that a reasonable man would believe that he was assenting to the terms proposed by the other party, and that other party upon that belief enters into the contract with him, the man thus conducting himself would be equally bound as if he had intended to agree to the other party's terms." In this case the plaintiff was building sidewalks for other owners in the same block and along the same line of frontage of defendant's property. In doing the work for the other owners he also built as a part of their sidewalks the curb or wall down to the bottom of the ditch, and of the same character as that which of necessity would have to be built for defendant in the construction of the sidewalk in front of defendant's property; and the other owners were directing that the curb or wall should be built before their property in constructing their sidewalks, and were paying therefor. The plaintiff offered to do the work in front of defendant's property in the same way and to the same extent. The defendant, Blake, requested him to build the sidewalk without specifically mentioning the curb or wall; and, when in pursuance of that request the plaintiff began the work by starting on the curb, the defendant stood by and saw the work of building the curb proceed. He must have known that plaintiff was only doing that work at his request and at the request of and by the direction of no other person or party. It was not suggested that any other person or that the city of Prescott would pay therefor, or was liable to pay therefor. The circumstances are sufficient to justify the finding from the words and conduct of the defendant, Blake, and the plaintiff that the defendant, Blake, requested this work of building the curb or wall to be done as a part of the work of building the sidewalk, and that he would pay the plaintiff therefor. "An implied contract to pay will be presumed if under all the circumstances the services were such as to lead to a reasonable belief that they would be paid for." Hogg v. Laster, 56 Ark. 382, 19 S. W. 945. The work here done was specially beneficial to Blake, and from his words and acts it is but reasonable to presume that it was the intention of both the parties that he requested the work to be done, and it is but just to imply that he intended to pay therefor. Bishop on Contracts, § 188; 2 Page on Contracts, § 772; 9 Cyc. 248. It follows that there is ample evidence to support the finding of the chancellor that defendant Blake employed the plaintiff to build the curb or wall, and that he is liable to the plaintiff for the cost of same by reason of that employment.

It is the opinion of BATTLE, J., that the circuit court should not have transferred this cause to the chancery court, and that, inasmuch as there was no right or remedy in the case that called for the interposition of a court of equity, the chancery court had no jurisdiction to entertain or try the case; that, on this account, the judgment of that court should be reversed and the cause remanded to the chancery court, with direction to transfer the cause to the circuit court. But he is of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to recover of defendant Blake the amount sued for, and that the City of Prescott was not a proper party to the suit. The majority of the judges are of opinion that inasmuch as none of the parties objected to the transfer of the cause to the chancery court, and did not object to the chancery court entertaining and trying the action, any objection to such transfer would now be considered waived, although none of the parties has made any objection to such transfer or to the trial of the cause by the chancery court in this court, and that under this state of the case the chancery court had jurisdiction to try and determine the cause. Collins v. Paepcke-Leicht Co., 74 Ark. 81, 84 S. W. 1044, and authorities there cited.

The decree is affirmed.

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 163*) — ANNUAL ACCOUNT—CONCLUSIVENESS—EXCEPTIONS.

Where, in proceedings to surcharge the final settlement of a guardian with a larger charge on the item of the balance of the last annual settlement, the record did not show that any item of property of the ward had been omitted from the settlement, or that any credit was allowed except on items of credit specifically set out in the settlement, and the order of the probate court confirming the annual settlement became final for want of timely appeal, it was proper to refuse to surcharge the final settlement; the confirmation of the annual settlement being conclusive except against direct attack.

viding that the guardian cannot without direction of the court allow for the education and maintenance of the ward more than the income of the estate, and the ward claimed that she had rendered services for the guardian worth the amount of the support, and the guardian denied that the ward had performed any work, the action of the court in allowing the credit would not be disturbed on appeal, because of the failure of the ward to abstract the testimony of the witnesses of the guardian.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Benton County; J. S. Maples, Judge.

Final accounting by J. B. Shockey, guardian of Courtney France, in which the latter filed exceptions. From a judgment confirming the final settlement, Courtney France appeals. Affirmed.

W. N. Carpenter, for appellant.

FRAUENTHAL, J. In 1895 the appellee, J. B. Shockey, was appointed guardian of Courtney Holland, a minor, by the probate court of Benton county. As such guardian he made eight annual settlements of the guardianship thereafter, and each of these settlements was confirmed by said probate court. No appeal was taken from any of said orders confirming said settlements. The last of these annual settlements was confirmed by said probate court in 1903. On January 20, 1904, Courtney Holland married and became Courtney France, and in April, 1904, she arrived at the age of 18 years. In April, 1904, the guardian filed his ninth and final settlement. In this final settlement the guardian took credit for an item of support, education, and money advanced to the ward since last settlement, amounting to $386.25, which was more than the amount of the rents and interest received, the clear income of the estate. According to the final settlement there was a balance of $250 due to the ward, and a number of months after the filing of the final settlement the appellee paid to the appellant the said alleged balance and took the receipt of herself and her husband therefor. During this time the final settlement, although long since filed, was not acted on by said probate court. In March, 1906, the appellant filed in the said probate court exceptions to the said final settlement. In this pleading she incorporates also exceptions to each of the eight annual settlements. Each exception is in the same language except as to the item of amount, so that the exception to the first will indicate the exceptions to the other annual settlements.

The exceptions to the first settlement are as follows: "(1) She excepts to the annual settlement of the said J. B. Shockey filed July 20, 1896, and says there is due her on said settlement $442.99." The amount of the balance actually found due on this first settlement by the order of confirmation was $427.99; but neither in this exception, nor in any of the exceptions, is it alleged that any item of charge, property, or asset is omitted from the settlements, or that any item of credit was allowed which was not set out in the settlements. It would appear from the argument of counsel for appellant that the objections to the annual settlements were based on the claim that certain items of credit were excessive as to amount, and this excessive amount had been allowed; and it is his contention that the probate court has jurisdiction to investigate the annual settlements in that particular, and if found erroneous to correct them. The above exceptions made to each of the annual settlements are incorporated in and made a part of the exceptions to the final settlement, and the specific exceptions to the final settlement are that the balance should be larger in amount. No specific item of asset is alleged or claimed to have been omitted from the final settlement. No item of credit taken is complained of, except the item: "Support, education, money advanced to the ward since last settlement $386.25." The probate court confirmed the final settlement as made by the guardian. From that judgment the appellant appealed to the circuit court, and that court restated the account. It found that it was concluded from investigating any erroneous or excessive allowances of credits in the annual settlements by the orders confirming those settlements. It found that the items of charges in the final settlement were correct. It allowed a credit of $125 on the item of support, education, and money furnished ward, and a credit of $40.75 for compensation or commission to the guardian, and other credits of the allowance of which no complaint is made. It found that there was still a balance due to the ward after the payment of said $250, and that this balance should bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from July, 1904, the date when the hearing of the matter on the confirmation of the final settlement could be first entertained in the probate court, and it remanded the proceedings to the probate court with directions to enter in that court an order in accordance with the judgment of the circuit court.

It is urged by counsel for appellant that the probate court has the power to open the settlements of guardians after confirmation thereof and to correct any errors in such settlements; but it has been uniformly held by this court that the order of confirmation of a settlement of a guardian by the probate court is a judgment which can be appealed from, but which cannot be otherwise disturbed, except in a court of chancery upon an allegation of fraud or some other recognized ground for equitable relief. Each order confirming each settlement becomes final and conclusive of all matters therein embraced and cannot be reopened for alleged errors. The order of confirmation is a finding and an adjudication of each item of charge and credit contained in such settlement, and the investigation of the correctness of such finding and adjudication is concluded. Rightor v. Gray, 23 Ark. 228; Payne v. McCabe, 37 Ark. 318; Phelps v. Buck, 40 Ark. 219. The record does not show that any item of property of the ward has been omitted from these annual settlements, or that any credit was allowed except upon items of credit specifically set out in the settlements. The probate court passed upon these and made a finding of the justice of their allowance and of their amounts. If its finding was erroneous, it could only be corrected upon appeal. No appeal has been taken from the orders of confirmation of these annual settlements within the time prescribed by law, and they have therefore become final. Thereafter the probate court has not the jurisdiction to reopen these settlements. Nelson v. Cowling, 89 Ark. 334, 116 S. W. 890. It follows that the court did not err in refusing to surcharge the final settlement with a larger charge on the item of the balance of the eighth annual settlement.

It is urged that in the final settlement the guardian should be charged with rent of homestead; but in the final settlement there is a charge made on an item of rent without specifically setting forth of what property it is the rent. The appellant in her abstract of the evidence has wholly failed to abstract the testimony of the witnesses of the appellee. As shown by the transcript, nine witnesses actually testified on the part of the appellee. We have repeatedly held that it is necessary that a fairly complete abstract of the record should be made in order to secure a review of questions depending on the record. Files v. Law, 88 Ark. 449, 115 S. W. 373; Jett v. Crittenden, 89 Ark. 349, 116 S. W. 665. In this case there is no abstract of the testimony of any of the nine witnesses who testified on the part of the appellee, and we are therefore led to presume from the court's finding that the contention of appellant that no charge was made for this rent is not well founded.

It is urged that the court erred in allowing the item of credit of $125 for support, education, and money furnished the ward. The probate court allowed upon this item the sum of $386.25, and the appellant claimed that this was in excess of the income of the ward, and that the expenditures were made without the direction of the probate court, and that it was error to allow it. Section 3792 of Kirby's Digest provides that: "Without such direction the guardian shall not be allowed in any case for the maintenance and education of the ward more than the clear income of the estate." The circuit court allowed on this item the sum of $125, and the evidence does not show that this exceeded the amount of the rent and interest received, which constituted the income of the estate. It is urged that appellant was a member of appellee's family and by her work earned for appellee the amount of her support; but the testimony of appellant herself shows that the appellee sent her to college from September to January and paid the expenses of her tuition and books, that he purchased for her clothes to the amount of $75, and that he furnished her money. The appellee denied that the appellant performed any work. The appellant has wholly failed to abstract the testimony of appellee and the witnesses in his behalf, and it cannot therefore be found that items to the value of $125 were not furnished to appellant, for which she is chargeable. In addition to this, the finding of the trial court sitting as a jury is as conclusive on appeal as the finding of a jury, and we cannot say in this case that there is not sufficient evidence to support the findings of the lower court. Bell v. Welch, 38 Ark. 139; Garland Co. v. Hot Springs Co., 68 Ark. 83, 58 S. W. 636; Ark. Central R. Co. v. Jansen, 119 S. W. 648.

It is urged that the court erred in allowing the item of compensation to the guardian. Upon an examination of the various settlements we find that no allowance was ever made and no credit taken by the guardian as a compensation for his services. The court here allowed him $40.75 for such compensation. Section 3828 of Kirby's Digest provides: "Guardians and curators shall receive such compensation for their services as the court shall decide to be just and reasonable." We cannot say that this amount allowed for compensation of the guardian was unjust, and certainly it was not excessive. We do not think that error was committed by allowing only 6 per cent. interest on the balance found due from the guardian, nor do we find from the record any prejudicial error committed by the lower court.

The judgment of the Benton circuit court herein is affirmed.

BRAGG v. HARTNEY et al.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Oct. 18, 1909.)

1. TRUSTS (§§ 95, 349*)—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST.
Where legal title to property is obtained through actual fraud or concealment, equity impresses a constructive trust on the property in favor of the one equitably entitled thereto, though he never had any legal estate therein, and equity has jurisdiction to reach the property either in the hands of the original wrongdoer, or in the hands of a subsequent holder, unless he is a purchaser in good faith and without notice.

2. TRUSTS (§ 95*)—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST.
Defendant, with knowledge that plaintiff's ancestor was incapable of transacting business, purchased land for $5,000, $3,000 of which was paid by the ancestor and defendant, and the ancestor gave a note for the balance. The title was taken in the name of defendant and ancestor, and they divided the land. After the death of the ancestor, the $2,000 note was probated against his estate, and the part of the land, the title to which was in his name, was sold to pay it, and defendant became the purchaser. Held, that a constructive trust was created in favor of the heirs of the ancestor, who succeeded to his rights in the property.

Appeal from Clay Chancery Court; Edward D. Robertson, Chancellor.

Suit by Martin Hartney and Mary Meschal against J. L. Bragg. From a decree for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Spence & Dudley, for appellant. J. T. Craig, M. P. Huddleston, and Johnson & Burr, for appellees.

HART, J. This is a suit in equity instituted in the Clay chancery court for the Eastern district by appellees, Martin Hartney and Mary Meschal, against the appellant, J. L. Bragg.

The abstract of appellees correctly states the substance of the pleadings and the findings and decree of the court, as follows: "Appellees, as sole heirs at law of T. J. Hartney, deceased, filed their amended complaint against J. L. Bragg, the appellant, and F. Linke, alleging therein that Bragg and T. J. Hartney in his lifetime bought a farm of 240 acres of R. Liddell for the agreed price of $5,000; $3,000 as paid in cash by Hartney at the time of the foreclosure, and $2,000 was secured by two notes of Hartney and Bragg, who afterward made a mutual partition of the land by exchange of deeds. Hartney died before any part of either note had been paid. Bragg procured an administrator of Hartney's estate to be appointed by the probate court of the Eastern district of Clay county, Ark., procured both land notes to be allowed and proved as debts against Hartney's estate, and caused Hartney's land to be sold by the administrator to pay said notes, at which sale Bragg was the purchaser at the price of $1,000. F. Linke, the assignee of said $2,000 of land notes, took a mortgage on the entire 240 acres for $2,000 from Bragg on the day of the administrator's sale. Said $2,000 and interest constitute a lien on all said lands in favor of said Linke and is unpaid." Appellees further allege that T. J. Hartney was, at the time of the purchase of the land from Liddell, the payment of the purchase price thereof, the division of the land, and the execution of the deed to Bragg in consummation thereof, a weak-minded person, wholly incapable of making or entering into contracts, or executing deeds, or dividing lands, or transacting any other business. Hartney paid all the $3,000 cash payment for the land, and Bragg paid no part thereof. Bragg, through overreaching, undue influence, and fraud practiced upon Hartney, procured the deed for the land to be made to himself and Hartney, procured an unjust division of the land to be made and Hartney's deed pursuant thereto. Through fraud Bragg procured the allowance of the whole of the $2,000 of purchase-money notes to be proved as debts against Hartney's estate, and the lands standing in Hartney's name to be sold by the administrator to himself for $1,000, by means whereof Bragg acquired title to the whole 240 acres without having paid a cent of the purchase price thereof. Appellees further averred that because of Bragg's fraud all deeds by which Bragg got any title to said lands are null and void, the pretended sale by the administrator is likewise null and void, and that all said deeds ought to be canceled and held for naught. Appellees offer to pay to Linke the amount of the $2,000 of unpaid purchase money, with interest, and prayed the court to cancel all deeds by which Bragg took any title to said lands and to divest all title thereto out of Bragg and invest the title in appellees, subject to Linke's claim and for all proper relief. Bragg filed his separate answer in the suit wherein he admits the purchase of the lands from Liddell, taking the deed for the same to himself and Hartney, the division of said lands, the death of Hartney, and the purchase of that interest by himself at the administrator's sale; but he avers that he paid to Hartney the half of the cash payment, denies all averments of fraud, and claimed to be the owner of all of said lands. Upon the trial of the cause the chancellor found all the issues in favor of appellees and against Bragg, and by the final decree canceled all deeds by which Bragg claimed title to said lands and divested all his interest therein and vested the same in appellees and charged a lien on said lands in favor of Linke for $2,945.44, the amount of unpaid purchase money and interest. Bragg alone appeals from this decree.

appellant, J. L. Bragg, and T. J. Hartney had lived in Hickman county, Ky. Bragg was the older and had known T. J. Hartney from his birth. A preponderance of the testimony shows that from childhood Hartney had been mentally weak, and almost an imbecile. His father died leaving a will, by the terms of which the lands devised to T. J. Hartney could not be sold until he reached the age of 30 years. As soon as he came into possession of his lands and personal property, Hartney began to dispose of it for a nominal price. Appellant Bragg and one Houston got some of it. Proceedings were instituted by his friends in Kentucky to have him declared of unsound mind, and a committee appointed to take care of his estate. The order was made, but no one could be found who would act. Soon afterwards, in January, 1903, Bragg came to Arkansas. T. J. Hartney sold his lands in Kentucky for $3,995. He received a draft for $3,000 and the remainder in cash. The land in controversy was sold to Bragg and Hartney for $5,000. Three thousand dollars of the purchase money was paid with the above-mentioned draft of T. J. Hartney, and the notes of Bragg and Hartney were given for the deferred payments. The title was taken in the name of Bragg and Hartney. Hartney came to Arkansas in February, 1903, and moved on the land with Bragg. He was never permitted to exercise any authority over the land and implicitly obeyed Bragg in all things. Hartney had lived with Bragg before coming to Arkansas. Just a short while before they left Kentucky, Bragg, referring to Hartney, said: "I have got a sucker, and when I turn him loose he won't do any one else any good." He further said: "I have got Tom Hartney on the string now. It is 'old man Bragg' now, and it will be 'Mr. Bragg next year.'" Bragg and Hartney made a division of the land, and Bragg received the more valuable part. Hartney then went back to Kentucky and died in March, 1904. He was buried at the expense of the county. The notes for $2,000, the balance of the purchase money, was probated against Hartney's estate, and that part of the land, the title to which was in his name, was sold to pay them. Bragg became the purchaser. He told one of his neighbors that Hartney's father had died in good circumstances, leaving Tom as his only child, and that he (Bragg) had just as well have the estate as any one. Bragg claims to have paid one-half of the $3,000 which was paid when the deed was executed; but a preponderance of the testimony shows that he was insolvent, and that the $3,000 was paid by T. J. Hartney. We are of the opinion, after a thoughtful reading of the record: That Bragg knew that Hartney was weak-minded and utterly incapable mentally of transacting any business; that Hartney was wholly under the control and dominion of Bragg, that on account of the undue influence exercised by Bragg he was induced to pay the $3,000 in the beginning and let the title be taken in the name of Bragg and himself; and that the whole transaction was fraudulent from its inception, and was deliberately planned by Bragg to get possession of the estate left Hartney by his father, without any cost to himself. Appellees are the sole heirs at law of the deceased, T. J. Hartney, and as such have succeeded to his rights in the property. The rights of F. Linke were protected by the decree of the chancellor, and he has not appealed.

The general rule on the subject is thus stated in volume 3 of Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, at page 2033, as follows: "In general, whenever the legal title to property, real or personal, has been obtained through actual fraud, misrepresentations, concealments, or weakness or necessities, or through any other similar means or under any other similar circumstances which render it unconscientious for the holder of the legal title to retain and enjoy the beneficial interest, equity impresses a constructive trust on the property thus acquired in favor of the one who is truly and equitably entitled to the same, although he may never perhaps have had any legal estate therein; and a court of equity has jurisdiction to reach the property either in the hands of the original wrongdoer, or in the hands of any subsequent holder until a purchaser of it in good faith and without notice acquires a higher right, and takes property relieved from the trust. The forms and varieties of these trusts, which are termed ex maleficio, or ex delicto, are practically without limit. The principle is applied wherever it is necessary for the obtaining of complete justice, although the law may also give the remedy of damages against the wrongdoer."

Without going into further details of the testimony of this case, it is sufficient to say that it brings the cause squarely within the principles above announced.

We are of the opinion that the decree of the chancellor is correct, and it therefore will stand affirmed.

THOMAS et al. v. BURKE et al.

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 130*)—PROHIBITION ORDER—PARTIES—RIGHT TO APPEAL.

A signer of a petition for a prohibition order filed in the county court thereby became a party to the record, and was guaranteed the right to appeal from an order denying the petition by the Constitution and laws of the state, though it might finally be decided that he was not eligible as a petitioner; the right of appeal depending not on the right of the petitioners to the relief prayed for, but on his right to be heard in the appellate court.

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 130*)—PROHIBITION ORDER—PROHIBITED DISTRICT—INHABITANTS—ENUMERATION.

Where a schoolhouse, named as the center of a three-mile prohibition district in a petition for the establishment thereof, was less than three miles from the state line, a ruling that in determining whether a majority of the adult inhabitants residing within a radius of three miles from such center desired the order the state line must be disregarded, was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 139; Dec. Dig. § 130.*]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 130*)—PROHIBITED DISTRICT—CENTER—PETITION—CONSTRUCTION.

Kirby's Dig. § 5120, provides that whenever the adult inhabitants within three miles of any schoolhouse shall desire to prohibit the sale or giving away of any intoxicating liquors, and a majority shall petition the county court, the court shall make an order, etc. A petition under such section described the house which was to mark the center of the prohibited area as "the public school building situated on block 34, in the city of Texarkana, Miller county, Ark." There were two buildings on block 34, both used for public school purposes situated 30 feet apart, under the supervision of the same superintendent and corps of teachers; one of the buildings being known as the main building, situated near the center of the block, and the other a smaller one called the "annex." Held, that the petition should be construed as referring to the main building only as the center of the proposed prohibited area, and if so construed, was not objectionable for uncertainty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 139; Dec. Dig. § 130.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 460*)—PROHIBITION DISTRICT—PAROL EVIDENCE.

Where a petition applied for an order prohibiting the sale of liquors within three miles surrounding a schoolhouse on a designated city block, and it appeared that there were two buildings used for school purposes on the block, parol evidence was admissible to show the surroundings, and to identify the particular building described.

Battle and Hart, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Miller County; Jas. S. Steel, Special Judge.

Petition by B. B. Thomas and others for a prohibition order, to which E. F. Burke and others filed an objection. From an order sustaining the objections, petitioners appeal. Reversed and remanded.

M. E. Sanderson and W. V. Tompkins, for appellants. J. D. Conway and Jno. N. Cook, for appellees.

McCULLOCH, C. J. This is an appeal from the judgment of the circuit court of Miller county refusing to make an order prohibiting the sale or giving away of intoxicating liquors within three miles of a schoolhouse in the city of Texarkana. The county court had refused to make the order prayed for, and an appeal was taken to the circuit court. The case was heard in the circuit court on oral evidence. The petition was in due form prescribed by law, and described the house which was to mark the center of the prohibited area as "the public school building situated on block 34, in the city of Texarkana, Miller county, Ark."

The first point to which attention should be directed is that raised by appellees (persons who were permitted by the court to appear and make themselves parties for the purpose of remonstrating against granting the prayer of the petition) whether or not the appeal from the judgment of the county court was properly granted. The record shows that the petitioners, which of course means all of them, prayed an appeal to the circuit court, and that the affidavit for appeal was made by B. B. Thomas, one of the petitioners and appellants. The appellees filed a motion in the circuit court to dismiss the appeal on the ground that Thomas had never been an inhabitant of the territory in question, that he was only temporarily there at the time the petition was signed and presented to the county court, and that he had removed to a distant part of the state before the case came up for hearing in the circuit court. The court overruled the motion to dismiss the appeal, and we think that was a correct ruling. It is unnecessary for us to decide, in passing on this ruling of the court refusing to dismiss the appeal, whether or not Mr. Thomas was in fact an inhabitant of the three-mile area within the meaning of the statute. He did in fact sign the petition, and was entitled to be heard, with the other petitioners, when the county court considered the matter; and when the court by its judgment denied the prayer of the petition, he was one of the persons aggrieved by the judgment within the meaning of the statute, and he, as well as the other petitioners, was entitled to prosecute an appeal to the higher court. In other words, the right to take an appeal depended, not on the right of the petitioners to the relief prayed for, but on the right to be heard in the appellate court when relief was denied in the inferior court; and when Mr. Thomas signed the petition which was filed in the county court, he became a party to that record, and was guaranteed the right of appeal by the Constitution and laws of the state as much as any other petitioners, even though it should finally be decided that he was not eligible as a petitioner. Of course, if Thomas had been the only person who took an appeal, and it appeared on the hearing that he was not eligible as a petitioner, and therefore had no interest in the further prosecution of the case, a question would arise as to whether or not the court should consider the case and grant the relief solely on his request. But no such question arises on this record, as it shows that all of the petitioners appealed, and the affidavit was made by Thomas as one of the parties aggrieved.

There are only two other questions in the case necessary for us to decide. One is this: The schoolhouse named in the petition is less than three miles distant from the state line, and the circuit court held that "all of the adult inhabitants residing within the radius of three miles of such center must be counted in ascertaining the total number of adult inhabitants within said district, irrespective of the state line." This court has decided to the contrary, and the ruling of the circuit court is incorrect. Lindley v. State (Ark.) 120 S. W. 987.

The remaining question is as to the correctness of the court's declaration of law and finding of fact concerning the designation of the schoolhouse, which was to mark the center of the proposed prohibition territory. The petition, as already shown, named "the public school building situated on block 34, in the city of Texarkana, Miller county, Ark.," as the center of the proposed territory. There was no conflict in the evidence on this branch of the case, and it is undisputed that there are two buildings on block 34, both used for public school purposes. The two buildings are situated about 30 feet apart (or about 100 to 150 feet from center to center), and are under the supervision of the same superintendent and the same corps of teachers. In other words, there are two buildings, about 30 feet apart, used in conducting one school by one superintendent and corps of teachers. One of the buildings is shown to be the main building, situated near the center of the block, and the other, which is a smaller one, is referred to as the "annex." Upon this showing, the court found that there were two public school buildings on block 34, and that the petition failed to designate the particular one which was to form the center of the proposed area. This was one of the grounds on which the court denied the prayer of the petition. The statute prescribes that "whenever the adult inhabitants residing within three miles of any schoolhouse, academy, college, university or other institution of learning, or of any churchhouse in this state, shall desire to prohibit the sale or giving away of any vinous, spirituous or intoxicating liquors of any kind," etc., and a majority thereof shall petition the county court of the county "wherein such institution of learning or churchhouse is situated," that said court shall make an order, etc. Kirby's Dig. § 5129. This phase of the statute has never been passed on by the court, except in the following cases, which do not reach to the particular question now under consideration: Williams v. Citizens, 40 Ark. 290; State v. Bailey, 43 Ark. 150; Gazola v. State, 45 Ark. 458; Lindley v. State, supra.

In Williams v. Citizens, supra, the petition named as the center of the proposed area two churches situated about 200 yards apart. This court held that that rendered the proceedings void. Judge Eakin, speaking for the court, said: "Two points, as centers of circular areas, cannot be designated in the same petition, signed without distinction, by a majority of the adult inhabitants living within three miles of both points, or of either one or the other point. In the first case the area would be less than one with a radius of three miles, and in the second case it would be greater. The statute confers no authority to make such an order as would result, in either case. Every adult inhabitant residing within three miles of any particular schoolhouse, church, etc., should be counted in determining the majority—that is, in theory, and as nearly practically as possible—and no one living more than three miles from that particular house should be. This cannot be effected by designating two or more distinct buildings more or less widely separated, without any indication of one as the center for all. Where they are close together, it would probably make little difference, but embarrassments would grow as the distance widened, and the courts cannot fix the limits within which the practice would be permissible." The next two cases cited above arose upon indictments for selling liquor within three miles of two churches, and the court, citing the Williams Case, held that the orders were void. In Lindley v. State, supra, the petition described the center of the proposed area as "the new stone public schoolhouse situated on block 23, in the town of Mammoth Springs," and it was afterwards shown that the house was situated on block 22, instead of block 23, as stated in the petition. This court held that the defect did not render the proceedings void, and that "it was sufficient to describe it in the language of the statute with such reasonable certainty as to identify it as the point marked from which the radii were to extend in designating the territory to be embraced in the order."

Now it is manifest that the framers of the statute had in view two things in shaping the form of the proceedings: One, that a definite object should mark the center of the prohibition area to be created; and the other that the radii of this area should extend three miles from this center. This necessarily means that the center shall be definitely and accurately pointed out, so that there should be no uncertainty as to the limits of the area. But absolute accuracy in the description is not required. Reasonable certainty is sufficient. This is demonstrated in Lindley v. State, supra, in which it was held that an error in describing the schoolhouse on the wrong block was immaterial, as the building was otherwise sufficiently described. Applying the descriptive language of the petition in this case to the facts shown to exist with reference to the buildings on block 34, there can be no doubt that it means the principal or main building, and not the so-called "annex." The descriptive words in their ordinary acceptation cannot mean anything else. Parol evidence is admissible of course to show the surroundings, so as to identify the particular building intended to be described—to fit the description to the building. Paragould v. Lawson, 88 Ark. 478, 115 S. W. 379. The petition, therefore, named only one building as the center of proposed area, and we are of the opinion that the learned judge erred in his conclusion that two buildings were named.

Appellants ask that we make a finding here of the fact as to whether or not the petition contained a majority of the adult inhabitants residing within three miles of the school building mentioned in the petition, and render a final judgment without remanding the case for further trial. We do not deem it proper to do this on the conflicting testimony in the record. The circuit judge made no findings of fact as to whether the petition contained a majority of the adult inhabitants residing in this state within the three-mile limit, and we think the case should be remanded for new trial in accordance with the law herein stated. It is so ordered.

SPAULDING MFG. CO. v. GODBOLD.

A judgment is not void because taken in the name of a partnership, objection not having been made to the action being brought in such name, or the judgment being so taken.

2. PARTNERSHIP (§ 68*)—DEED TO PARTNERSHIP IN FIRM NAME.

A deed to a partnership in its firm name, not including the name of any partner, when the purchase was by the partners individually, and the deed was taken to the partnership through mistake, is not void in equity; but may be corrected.

Appeal from Columbia Chancery Court; E. O. Mahoney, Chancellor.

Suit by the Spaulding Manufacturing Company against S. A. Godbold. Decree for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Stevens & Stevens, for appellant. McKay & Lile, for appellee.

HART, J. The controversy in this case is about the title to certain lands in Columbia county, Ark. An action in ejectment therefor was commenced by the Spaulding Manufacturing Company against S. A. Godbold in the Columbia circuit court.

The complaint alleges that the Spaulding Manufacturing Company is a partnership composed of H. W. Spaulding, F. E. Spaulding, and E. H. Spaulding. The deed relied upon to support the action is a sheriff's deed under execution, and is made an exhibit to the complaint. The deed recites that the execution was issued and came to the hands of the sheriff on the 27th day of July, 1905; that the Spaulding Manufacturing Company obtained a judgment against S. A. Godbold, and that the execution was issued on that judgment; that the levy and sale was made under the execution, and that the Spaulding Manufacturing Company became the purchaser; that the grantee named in the deed was the Spaulding Manufacturing Company. The defendant Godbold excepted to the deed for the reason that there was no grantee named in the deed. The circuit court sustained the exception, and ordered that the deed be stricken from the record for the reason that it was not entitled to be used as evidence on the trial of the cause. The plaintiff then moved that the cause be transferred to equity, and as grounds stated that the land was purchased by the individual partners at the execution sale, and that, by mistake of the draftsman, the firm name, instead of the names of the partners, was written in the deed as grantee. They asked that the deed be reformed, and that, when so reformed or a new deed executed, the possession of the land be given to them. The court granted the motion, and transferred the cause to the chancery court. On motion of the plaintiff the chancery court ordered that the motion to transfer the cause to the chancery court be made an amendment to the complaint. Whereupon the defendant demurred to the complaint. The court sustained the demurrer, and dismissed the action. The plaintiffs have appealed to this court.

It is contended by counsel for appellee that the judgment recited in the sheriff's deed under execution is void for the reason that it was rendered in the firm name, and not in the names of the individuals composing the firm, and that the deed therefore conveys no title. It has been expressly held in Missouri that judgments rendered in favor of a firm by the firm name are not void. Davis v. Kline, 76 Mo. 310. See, also, Conrades & Co. v. Spink, 38 Mo. App. 309. In the case of Frisk et al. v. Reigelman, 75 Wis. 499, 43 N. W. 1117, 44 N. W. 766, 17 Am. St. Rep. 198, the court said: "Bringing the action in the firm name does not render the judgment void, but is a mere defect or irregularity, which is waived unless due objection be made thereto before judgment." See, also, 15 Ency. of Pleading & Practice, pp. 840, 841. Section 6093, Kirby's Dig., provides that the defendant may demur to the complaint where it appears on its face that the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue. 33, the court held that the judgment should have been in favor of the state, the obligee in the collector's bond, or of the county treasurer, the real party in interest. The judgment in fact was rendered in the name of the county. The court said: "This was a matter of form rather than of substance, and, since the objection to the plaintiff's capacity to sue for this demand was not taken either by demurrer or answer, it must be deemed to have been waived." From which we deduce that, no objection having been made to the judgment being taken in the name of Spaulding Manufacturing Company in the original suit, the defect of parties was waived, and the judgment became a valid one upon which execution might issue.

It is next objected that the naming of the Spaulding Manufacturing Company as the grantee in the sheriff's deed under execution renders the deed void. This is not a case like that of Percifull v. Platt, 36 Ark. 456, and Cooper v. Newton, 68 Ark. 157, 56 S. W. 867, where the style of the firm includes the name of one of the partners, and the court held that the legal title was conveyed to such partner, and that he became in equity a trustee for the other partners to the extent of their interest. In the present case the firm name includes the name of no person. It is the general rule that a conveyance to a partnership by its firm name which does not include the name of any of the partners does not vest in it any legal title because the partnership is not recognized in law as a person. Because the deed is void at law, it by no means follows that the same rule applies in equity. The appellees allege in their amended complaint that the individual members of the firm were the purchasers of the land at the execution sale, and that by mistake of the draftsman the name of the firm, instead of the names of the persons who composed the firm, was written in the deed. It is a fundamental principle of equity that it regards and treats that as done which in good conscience ought to be done, and, as said by Mr. Pomeroy: "It is only by looking at the intent rather than at the form that equity is able to treat that as done which in good conscience ought to be done."

Again, it is contended that a court of equity will refuse to aid the defective execution of statutory powers, and the cases of Tatum v. Croom, 60 Ark. 487, 30 S. W. 885, and Landon v. Morris, 75 Ark. 6, 86 S. W. 672, are cited to support that contention. In those cases the mistake was not only in the execution of the deed, but in the proceedings anterior to that, and upon which the sale was based. But in the present case it will be observed that there was no irregularity or defect in the execution, or the proceedings thereunder as was the case in Tatum v. Croom and Landon v. Morris, supra, but under the allegations of the complaint the execution and the proceedings under it were regular in all respects, and the only mistake was in the execution of the deed itself. The individuals who composed the firm are alleged to have purchased the lands in question and the primary object of the action as it now stands under the pleadings is merely to correct the deed by inserting therein the true names of the grantee. The interest in the land of Godbold, the execution debtor, was divested out of him by the sale under the execution and his subsequent failure to redeem within the statutory period; and it would be inequitable to deny appellees the relief prayed for. The sheriff who made the sale or his successor in office would be a necessary party to obtain the relief prayed.

The decree is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded, with leave to the appellees to make such new parties as they are advised is necessary to do.

HOGINS v. BULLOCK.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 131*)—MAYORS—FILLING VACANCY IN OFFICE.

A vacancy in the office of mayor is to be filled by special election, the mayor, under Kirby's Dig. §§ 5432, 5581, 5589, being a member of the city council, section 5433 providing for special elections of members of the council, and Const. art. 6, § 23, authorizing the Governor to fill by appointment any vacancy in any office only when no mode is provided by the Constitution and laws for filling it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 305, 378; Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

2. ELECTIONS (§ 158*) — NONOBSERVANCE OF STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Nonobservance of the provisions of Kirby's Dig. §§ 2777, 2779, 2780, 2788, 2790, as to certification of nominations and printing of ballots, and forbidding the printing thereon of the name of any candidate not certified and filed in the prescribed time, does not, in the absence of fraud, where not objected to till after election, make the election void; the statute not declaring such effect.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pope County; Hugh Barham, Judge.

Suit by J. F. Bullock against J. F. Hogins. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

On the 4th day of February, 1909, the mayor of Russellville, a city of the second class, resigned. A special election was ordered for February 16, 1909, to fill the vacancy. Appellee was elected at the election held on that day, and on February 23, 1909, was commissioned by the Governor. In the meantime, on the 8th of February, 1909, appellant was appointed mayor by the Governor for the unexpired term prescribed by law, had received his commission, and had duly entered upon the discharge of the duties of mayor. Appellee, after receiving his commission, qualified as mayor by taking the oath of office and filing bond with the recorder of the city. He demanded of appellant the office and records of same, and, upon appellant's refusal to surrender them, brought this suit against appellant to oust him from the office. The evidence showed that a proclamation by the acting mayor of the city was made and published February 8th, 9th, and 12th in a newspaper published and having a general circulation in Russellville. The notice of election was given eight days. It was the usual notice given for special elections. There was no primary election to nominate candidates for mayor to be elected at the special election to be held on the 16th of February, 1909. The name of appellee was printed on tickets by the election commissioners. No other names were printed on the tickets. There were no other avowed candidates, but blank spaces and lines were left on the printed tickets so voters could write other names if they wished. Appellee received all the votes cast at the election, to wit, 203 votes. Appellant voted for appellee. The election commissioners certified to the election of appellee, and he was commissioned as above stated by the Governor.

Dan B. Granger and Brooks, Hays & Martin, for appellant. R. B. Wilson, for appellee.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. The only question is: Who was entitled to the office of mayor of the city of Russellville, when appellee instituted this suit? The Constitution makes no provision for filling the office of mayor. The framers of the Constitution left the entire matter of the organization of cities to the Legislature. Article 12, § 3. By section 5433, Kirby's Dig., it is provided that: "Special elections of the members of the city council of all cities shall be held at such time and place as the mayor by proclamation shall direct, so that at least ten days' notice thereof shall be given." The mayor, under the law, is a member of the city council. See section 5589, Kirby's Dig., in connection with sections 5432 and 5581. By these provisions it is clear that the only mode for filling a vacancy in the office of mayor is by special election, and not by appointment. In the absence of express constitutional or statutory authority authorizing the Governor to appoint, he has no such power. "The right to make appointments to office is not inherently an executive prerogative." 23 A. & E. Ency. Law, p. 343, and cases cited. But this court has held that the authority to fill vacancies in municipal offices does come within the purview of the general powers conferred by statute on municipalities in this state. Payne v. Rittman, 66 Ark. 201, 49 S. W. 814. Our conclusion on this point is that neither the Constitution nor the statute confers upon the Governor the power to fill vacancies in the office of mayor by appointment. Section 23 of article 6 of the Constitution, providing that, when any vacancy occurs in any office and no mode is provided by the Constitution and laws for filling same, the Governor shall fill the same by appointment, etc., has no application to a vacancy occurring in the office of mayor. A mode is provided by statute for filling vacancies in the office of mayor. See sections of Digest, supra, and section 5612. Section 23, art. 6, Const., refers to other than municipal officers.

2. Appellant urges that, even if election was the only mode of filling the vacancy, such election in this case was invalid because the provisions of the general election laws as to the certification of nominations, printing of ballots, and forbidding the printing thereon of the name of any candidate not certified and filed in the time prescribed apply likewise to special elections for mayor. See sections 2777, 2779, 2780, 2788, 2790, Kirby's Dig. We need not decide whether these provisions apply to the special election of mayor; for, conceding that they do, appellant is in no position to complain of a failure to observe the requirements of the law. He held the office without legal authority, and was not the victim of any unfair treatment in the election. He was not a candidate, and voted for the appellee, who was the only candidate at the very election which he now calls in question. It is not pretended that any fraud was perpetrated on him by the appellee or the election commissioners. The statute does not declare that the election shall be void at which ballots are used containing the name of a person who has not been certified as a nominee. The failure to comply with the letter of the law by election officers, especially in matters over which neither the candidate nor the voter has control, and in which no fraud is perpetrated, will not as a general rule render an election void unless the statute expressly makes it so. McCrary on Elections, § 403. Says the Supreme Court of Indiana: "All the provisions of the election law are mandatory if enforcement is sought before election in a direct proceeding for that purpose; but after election all should be held directory only in support of the result, unless of a character to effect an obstruction to the free and intelligent casting of the vote, or to the ascertainment of the result, or unless the provisions affect an essential element of the election, or unless it is expressly declared by the statute that the particular act is essential to the validity of an election, or that its omission shall render it void." Jones v. State, 153 Ind. 440, 55 N. E. 229. The same principle is recognized in Rhodes v. Driver, 69 Ark. 501, 64 S. W. 272. See, also, Wheat v. Smith, 50 Ark. 266, 7 S. W. 161; Govan v.

JOHNSON & BURR v. ELDER.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. June 21, 1909. On Rehearing, Nov. 1, 1909.)

1. QUIETING TITLE (§ 10*)—TITLE OF PLAINTIFF.

In a suit to quiet title, plaintiff must succeed on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of that of his adversary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 36; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 658*)—TAX SALES—NOTICE OF SALE—CERTIFICATE.

Failure of the county clerk to attach to the record of the list and notice of the sale of delinquent tax lands the certificate required by Mansf. Dig. § 5763, is a fatal defect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 658.*]

On Rehearing.

3. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 65*)—OCCUPANCY—BOUNDARY LINE.

Where the grantor of B. occupied a small area of cleared land claiming it as his own for 26 years before he conveyed it to B., such occupancy constituted a complete investiture of title by adverse possession, notwithstanding the mistake in his belief that it was within the boundary lines of his claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. § 366; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 50*)—LEASE—CONSIDERATION.

Where plaintiff's alleged tenant had complete title by adverse possession to a part of the land in controversy at the time plaintiff claimed title thereto, such tenant's agreement to lease the land from plaintiff and his execution of a note for the rent agreed on were void for want of consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 120; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

5. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 100*)—OCCUPANCY BY TENANT—VOID LEASE.

Where the owner and occupant of a small tract of cleared land, on plaintiff's alleging title to a larger tract including the land so cleared, agreed without consideration to hold the land for plaintiff as tenant to avoid litigation, such alleged tenant's continued occupation of the small tract could not operate as plaintiff's constructive possession of the entire larger tract under color of title so as to give plaintiff title by adverse possession on the expiration of a subsequent period of limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 547–574; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

6. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 30*)—ATTORNMENT—NOTORIETY.

Plaintiff, having acquired a void tax deed to certain land including a cleared tract in possession of B., who had acquired title to the cleared tract by adverse possession, demanded the land from B., who agreed to pay a small yearly rent to plaintiff for the land so occupied. B. did not extend his possession to the unoccupied land; nor was anything done to change his visible possession; nor was plaintiff's title otherwise recognized, except that on one occasion plaintiff was permitted to send a man into B.'s field to gather two bushels of corn which was claimed as rent. Held, that B.'s attornment to plaintiff was not of sufficient notoriety to extend his possession to the entire tract claimed by plaintiff under his deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 126, 127; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

7. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 30*)—OCCUPANCY—NOTORIETY.

The element of notoriety must be added to adverse possession before it can ripen into title by limitations, since possession follows the title of the true owner until that possession is actually invaded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. § 126; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

8. BOUNDARIES (§ 18*) — LAKES — RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

The owner of land abutting on the meandered line of a lake has prima facie title to the center of the lake by virtue of his riparian rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 121, 122; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

9. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 26*)—SURVEY—CORRECTION OF ERRORS.

A mistake in the survey of the meandered line of the lake on government lands may be corrected by the government.

10. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 61*) — SURVEY — LAKE BED.

The United States in 1885 patented to Arkansas all unsurveyed lands in certain townships as swamp and overflowed land. The tract in controversy at the time the land was surveyed was within the meandered lines of a lake, and according to the official plat adjoined plaintiff's tract, which abutted on the meandered line. It did not appear that the land department had ever resurveyed or officially determined whether the area was land or lake bed at the time of the original survey, and the patent to the state merely conveyed to it "all of the unsurveyed land in the township mentioned." Held that, if the tract was in fact land instead of lake bed at the time of the original survey, the subsequent patent conveyed the title to the state, from which it passed to defendant's grantor, and if it had been officially declared by the Land Department to be land instead of lake bed at the time of the survey, such ruling would overturn plaintiff's prima facie riparian rights with reference thereto.

Appeal from Greene Chancery Court; E. D. Robertson, Chancellor.

Action by W. S. Elder against Johnson & Burr. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed on rehearing.

Johnson & Burr, pro se. Huddleston & Taylor, for appellee.

FRAUENTHAL, J. This action was originally instituted by the plaintiff, W. S. Elder, by filing an ex parte petition on October 14, 1907, in the Greene chancery court seeking to confirm his title to the land involved in this suit, and which is described as the fractional N. E. quarter of section 27, township 19 N., range 5 E., containing 142.08 acres, in Greene county, Ark. His claim of title was founded upon a tax deed executed to him by the state of Arkansas on June 4, 1903, in which it is recited that the land was sold to the state for the nonpayment of the taxes of 1891. The defendants, Johnson & Burr, and A. H. Glasscock filed an intervention in said suit and were made parties thereto. They claimed title to the land by virtue of the grant of said land to the state of Arkansas as swamp lands by the United States under the act of Congress approved September 28, 1850 (Act Sept. 28, 1850, c. 84, 9 Stat. 519), deed from the state of Arkansas to John B. Jones on March 18, 1879, and by mesne conveyances from Jones to defendants. In his original petition the plaintiff alleged that the land was wild and unoccupied; but subsequently he filed an answer to defendant's intervention and a cross-complaint against the defendants, in which he stated that the allegation that the land was wild and unoccupied was made by mistake, and alleged that he was and had been in possession of the land for a number of years, and he asked in this cross-complaint to have his title to the land quieted in him. He also filed a motion to have the above allegation as to the occupancy of said land stricken from the petition, and this was by the court granted. The defendants made answer to the cross-complaint of the plaintiff, and this cause thereupon became an action by plaintiff to quiet his title to said land. The chancellor found that the plaintiff had acquired title to the land by adverse possession of the land for two years under said tax deed, and entered a decree quieting the title to the land in the plaintiff.

The evidence in the case was taken partly by depositions and partly by the agreed statement of facts. From this it appears that the tax sale of said lands for the year of 1891, and upon which is founded the tax deed executed by the state of Arkansas to plaintiff, is void for the reason that the county clerk failed to attach to the record of the list and notice of sale of delinquent lands for that year the certificate required by section 5763 of Mansfield's Digest; and the sales of lands in said county for said year were held to be void by this court in the case of Taylor v. State, 65 Ark. 595, 47 S. W. 1055. But the plaintiff claims that he has had possession of the land under said tax deed for a period of more than two years next before the commencement of this action, and in this way claims title to the land. The muniments of title introduced by defendants indicate a chain of title from the United States to them; but it is unnecessary to inquire further into the alleged title of defendants. Because in a suit like this to quiet title, the plaintiff must succeed upon the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of the title of his adversary. Lawrence v. Zimpleman, 37 Ark. 644; Chapman & Dewey Land Co. v. Bigelow, 77 Ark. 338, 92 S. W. 534; Mason v. Gates, 82 Ark. 294, 102 S. W. 190; Little v. Williams, 88 Ark. 37, 113 S. W. 340; Sibly v. England (Ark.) 119 S. W. 820. And if the plaintiff has title to the land by reason of said tax sale and possession thereunder, it would be superior to the alleged title of defendants.

The sole question therefore involved in this case is whether the plaintiff has had the possession of said land under said tax deed for such time as under the law will invest him with the title. This tract of land is located within the meandered lines of what is known as "Cache Lake" according to the original survey of the United States government. At the time of the purchase of the land by the plaintiff in 1903 from the state, a number of acres of the land were above the former marshy lands of the lake, and some acres of it were dry; but the greater part of it was covered with timber. About 1½ acres of the land were cleared and in cultivation and were located within an inclosure of another tract owned by one Don Byers. Byers and his grantors had supposed that this 1½ acres of the land, which is in the shape of a triangle, was part of a different and distinct tract of land owned by them, and so had been inclosed with a fence in conjunction with their tract, and this triangle was then in the actual possession of Byers. In the fall of 1903 the plaintiff saw Byers and laid claim to this part of the land, and thereafter in 1904 had the same surveyed, and by the survey showed that this triangular portion was a part of the tract of land described in his tax deed. Byers and the plaintiff then entered into an agreement by which Byers agreed to hold the possession of the triangular tract as the tenant of the plaintiff and to attorn to the plaintiff as such tenant therefor. He then executed his note to the plaintiff for the rent of the land for the year of 1904 in the sum of $5. He agreed to thus become the tenant of the plaintiff and to recognize the title of the plaintiff to the tract of land for the reason that he did not want any litigation over it; but he testified that he then held, and for all the years since 1904 continued to hold, the possession of this tract of land as the tenant of the plaintiff. Byers and his grantors of the land adjoining this tract had had possession of this tract for some years before 1903; but in 1903 Byers thus surrendered the possession to the adverse claim and demand of the plaintiff and in subordination to the rights of the plaintiff, and as the tenant of plaintiff he agreed to hold the possession of the land, for the plaintiff, and did so hold it up to the date of the commencement of this suit. The chancellor in effect made this finding of fact, and, while the evidence is not entirely satisfactory, nevertheless it is sufficient in our opinion to support that finding. Where the chancellor's finding is not clearly against the preponderance of the evidence, it must be sustained. Whitehead v. Henderson, 67 Ark. 200, 56 S. W. 1065; Hinkle v. Broadwater, 73 Ark. 489, 84 S. W. 510.

It is urged by the defendants that, inasmuch as Byers was already in possession of the land, he could not become the tenant of the plaintiff; but we cannot see how that would affect the relation between those parties, if as a matter of fact an agreement of tenancy was made. The relation of landlord and tenant is created by a contract. That may be either express or implied, and its validity is, like all other contracts, based on an agreement between the parties. The fact that the tenant is in the possession of the land at the time of the creation of the tenancy does not affect such contract, if made; and it will not affect it, even though the tenant had prior to that time claimed to have a better title to the land. 24 Cyc. 938; Hershey v. Clark, 27 Ark. 527; Hughes v. Watts, 28 Ark. 153. In the case of Locke v. Frasher, 79 Va. 409, it is held that the general rule that a tenant cannot dispute his landlord's title is not varied when the tenant is in actual possession at the time he makes the contract of tenancy.

The effect of the acceptance by such person of such a contract is a recognition of the title and the possession of the lessor, and is the same as if the party, lessor, had entered and taken possession. The mere fact that such a contract is entered into in order to avoid litigation will not defeat it. That is not equivalent to duress, and, if possession was not given in this way, it could probably have been secured by the lessor through other legal avenues. In the case of School District of City of Harrisburg v. Long (Pa.) 10 Atl. 769, one claiming to own land in the possession of another procured the execution of a rental contract by an assertion of title in himself and a threat of eviction, and it was held that such rental contract was valid, and the tenant could not dispute the landlord's title. In the case in review therefore Byers could agree to become the tenant of the plaintiff, although previously in the possession of the land; and under such agreement the possession of Byers as tenant became the possession of the plaintiff as landlord. 1 Cyc. 996; James v. Miller, 54 Ark. 460, 16 S. W. 195; Cox v. Daugherty, 75 Ark. 395, 36 S. W. 184, 112 Am. St. Rep. 75; Washington v. Moore, 84 Ark. 220, 105 S. W. 253, 120 Am. St. Rep. 29; Lucas v. Brooks, 18 Wall. 436, 21 L. Ed. 779; Palmer v. Melson, 76 Ga. 803; Forgy v. Harvey, 151 Ind. 507, 51 N. E. 1066. Under the evidence in this case therefore the plaintiff was in the actual possession of 1½ acres of the tract of land in controversy for more than two years continuously before the commencement of this suit, and such possession was open and adverse. That possession was held under the tax deed, which, though void, was yet a color of title. Elliott v. Pearce, 20 Ark. 508; Cofer v. Brooks, 20 Ark. 542. It has been repeatedly held by this court that the actual possession of a part of the land under a deed describing the entire tract is in law possession to the limit of the whole land. Ledbetter v. Fitzgerald, 1 Ark. 448; Logan v. Jelks, 34 Ark. 547; Sparks v. Farris, 71 Ark. 117, 71 S. W. 255, 945; Crill v. Henderson, 71 Ark. 390, 74 S. W. 299; Boynton v. Ashabranner, 75 Ark. 514, 88 S. W. 568; Rucker v. Dixon, 78 Ark. 99, 93 S. W. 750; Connerly v. Dickinson, 81 Ark. 258, 99 S. W. 82; Van Etten v. Dougherty, 83 Ark. 534, 103 S. W. 737.

The case of Wheeler v. Foote, 80 Ark. 435, 97 S. W. 447, is very similar to the case at bar on this question of possession. In that case a part of the land in controversy, about 1½ acres, had been cleared, fenced, and occupied by the owner of the adjoining tract and had been thus occupied by him under a mistake that this part was on his own tract. The occupant, upon the claim made by the holder of a tax title, agreed to hold possession as tenant of the tax owner, and in consideration that he would protect the timber on the land from trespassers. In that case the court held that through the tenancy thus created the holder of the tax deed obtained possession of this 1½ acres of the land, and that through the tenant he thus held possession under color of title to the whole, and that this gave the holder of the tax deed title to the whole land described in the deed. It results from this, and we are of opinion that the evidence sustains the finding of the chancellor, that the plaintiff was in continuous adverse possession of the land for more than two years under the tax deed, conveying the land in controversy to him. The effect of this was to confer on the plaintiff a valid title to all the land in controversy. Jacks v. Chaffin, 34 Ark. 534; Wilson v. Spring, 38 Ark. 182; Gates v. Kelsey, 57 Ark. 523, 22 S. W. 162; Cooper v. Lee, 59 Ark. 460, 27 S. W. 970; Finley v. Hogan, 60 Ark. 499, 30 S. W. 1045; McConnell v. Swepston, 66 Ark. 141, 49 S. W. 566; Ross v. Royal, 77 Ark. 324, 91 S. W. 178; Dickinson v. Hardie, 79 Ark. 364, 96 S. W. 355.

We find therefore no error in the decree, and the same is affirmed.

On Rehearing.

McCULLOCH, C. J. On further consideration of the evidence in this case, we find the facts to be that the grantor of Byers, the alleged tenant of plaintiff, Elder, occupied the small area of cleared land, claiming it as his own, for about 26 years, before he conveyed to Byers. This constituted a complete investiture of title, notwithstanding the mistake in getting beyond the boundary line. Hudson v. Stillwell, 80 Ark. 575, 98 S. W. 356. Byers being the owner of the land, his alleged agreement to attorn to plaintiff was void and unenforceable. The note which he gave to plaintiff was also void for want of consideration. Parham v. Dedman, 66 Ark. 26, 48 S. W. 673.

The question is therefore presented whether or not the void agreement of Byers, the owner and occupant of the small tract of cleared land, to attorn to plaintiff, constituted such possession by the latter of that part of the land as to extend his possession constructively over the unoccupied land in controversy to which he had color of title, and ripen into title by limitation. We conclude that it did not. The plaintiff was never in possession of any part of the land, either actually or constructively. He had neither title, nor possession, nor right of possession. If the real owners of the land had made inquiry during the alleged period of limitation and ascertained the true facts, they would not have found the plaintiff in possession of any part of their land, because he was not, in fact, in possession either in person or by agent or tenant. This conclusion is not in conflict with the doctrine announced in Wheeler v. Foote, 80 Ark. 435, 97 S. W. 447, for the facts of that case are clearly distinguishable from the facts in this. There, as soon as Bloomer cleared part of the tract by mistake as to boundary, and before he acquired title by lapse of time, he agreed to attorn to the plaintiff, Mrs. Foote, and he thereafter occupied the cleared land as her tenant and acted as her agent in keeping trespassers off the adjoining timber land. He had never acquired any title to the land when he agreed to attorn to Mrs. Foote as his landlord, and his occupancy was notorious as her tenant and agent for a long time thereafter, until the commencement of the litigation.

We think, also, that the alleged attornment of Byers to plaintiff was insufficient, for another reason, to extend his possession constructively over the unoccupied land: It lacked sufficient notoriety to amount to adverse possession. The facts, as we find them to be, are that Byers did only one act before the commencement of this litigation which could be claimed as an attornment to plaintiff. That was his agreement, about three years before the commencement of the action, to pay plaintiff a small amount of rent. After the suit had been commenced, he permitted plaintiff to send a man into his field and gather about two bushels of corn, which was claimed as rent. There was no visible change of possession, and nothing was done to give notoriety to the agreement to attorn. There was nothing done to put the real owners upon notice that the actual possession of the small tract of cleared land by one who had no color of title was transferred to another person who had color of title so as to extend the possession constructively. The injustice of permitting a secret transfer of possession to one who had color of title so as to extend his possession over the unoccupied portion of the land is manifest. The title to 1½ acres of the land had already been taken from the true owner by Byers and his vendor, through their occupancy for the full period of limitations; but they had no color of title which extended their possession beyond the limits of the actual occupancy, and, in order to acquire the title to the remainder of the tract, there must have been something in the nature of actual notice to the true owner or its equivalent. The element of notoriety must be added to adverse possession before it can ripen into title by limitation. Possession follows the title of the true owner until that possession is actually invaded. Haggert v. Ranny, 73 Ark. 344, 84 S. W. 703. We conclude therefore that the plaintiff's claim of title by adverse possession cannot be sustained.

This conclusion makes it necessary to give attention to another feature of the case not discussed in the original opinion. The tract of land in controversy was, at the time of the government survey in the year 1846, within the meandered lines of Cache Lake, according to the official plat of that survey, and the plaintiff is the owner of a tract of 17.92 acres abutting on the meandered line. This gives the plaintiff the prima facie title to the center of the lake by virtue of his apparent riparian rights. Little v. Williams, 88 Ark. 37, 113 S. W. 340; Rhodes v. Cissell, 82 Ark. 367, 101 S. W. 758.

But a mistake in the survey is subject to correction by the government. Little v. Williams, supra. The United States government in 1885 patented to the state of Arkansas all of the unsurveyed lands in this and certain other townships as swamp and overflowed land, and it does not appear that the Land Department ever caused another survey to be made and officially determined that the area in controversy was land instead of lake bed at the time of the original survey. The patent does not specifically describe the several tracts of land, but in general terms conveys "all of the unsurveyed land" in the township named. If it was in fact land, instead of lake bed, at the time of the original survey (of which there is no direct proof in this record), the subsequent patent by the government of unsurveyed land conveyed the title to the state of Arkansas, and the state, in turn, conveyed it to Jones, the defendant's grantor; and if it be found that the Land Department of the United States has officially declared this particular tract to have been land, instead of lake bed, at the time of the original survey, that would overturn the prima facie riparian rights of the plaintiff. These matters are not sufficiently developed in the records for us to reach a decision as to the rights of the parties on this branch of the case. We cannot determine whether the facts of the case fall within the doctrine announced in Little v. Williams, supra, or of Chapman & Dewey Land Co. v. Bigelow, 77 Ark. 338, 92 S. W. 534.

Digitized by Google

The plaintiff is not entitled to an affirmance of the decree on the strength of his prima facie showing of riparian rights, for it is obvious that, if he be given that portion of the land between parallel or converging lines running to the center of the lake, he would not be entitled to all of the land in controversy, and we cannot tell from this record how much, if any, he would be entitled to. Inasmuch as this branch of the case was not fully developed, we will leave it open for further proceedings in the chancery court, with leave to both parties to introduce further testimony.

A rehearing is therefore granted, and the decree is remanded, with directions to deny the plaintiff's right to recover on his alleged title by adverse possession, but for further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion on the other branch of the case.

BATTLE, J., concurs in the judgment, and also in all of the opinion, except that part which holds that the alleged attornment of Byers to plaintiff was ineffectual to give possession of the cleared land to the latter because Byers was then in possession and was the owner of the land by limitation. He expresses no opinion on that point, and prefers to place the decision, as to this branch of the case, on the other ground stated in the opinion, viz., that the alleged attornment by Byers to plaintiff was not of itself an act of sufficient notoriety to constitute adverse possession in him so as to constructively extend his possession over the unoccupied land.

FRAUENTHAL, J. In the former opinion it was said that the evidence was not entirely satisfactory to sustain the finding that the appellee held the possession of the triangular tract of land through Byers as his tenant. On further examination of the evidence I do not think that it is sufficient to sustain the finding that Byers and Elder entered into a definite and binding agreement that Byers would rent the land and become the tenant of Elder and would absolutely and unconditionally recognize the title of Elder as superior to his claim or title to the land, and that such agreement of tenancy continued during two consecutive years; nor that such possession under such agreement of tenancy was so open and notorious as to put in operation the two years' statute of limitation.

On this account I concur in sustaining the motion for rehearing herein.

YORK v. STATE.

1. JURY (§ 110*)—FAILURE TO PEREMPTORILY CHALLENGE.

Defendant cannot avail himself of any error of the court in excusing jurors from the panel and summoning talesmen, not having peremptorily challenged the talesmen, and his peremptory challenges not having been exhausted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 518, 520; Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

2. JUDGES (§ 29*)—EXCHANGING CIRCUITS PENDING TRIAL.

Under Const. art. 7, § 22, and Kirby's Dig. §§ 1321, 1322, authorizing judges to temporarily exchange circuits with the same powers as in their own circuit, there was no error in judges exchanging pending a prosecution before one of them, in which all the evidence had been adduced, the instructions given, and the opening arguments of counsel made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 140–152; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 822*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CHARGE AS A WHOLE.

Construing the charge as a whole, instructions given on behalf of the state and that given for defendant on the question of self-defense was not prejudicial, those given for the state stating general rules of law, without any direction as to the verdict, while that for defendant was specific, applying the law to the facts, as defendant contended they were, and directing the jury to acquit if they found the facts to be as stated therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1900, 1991, 1994, 1995, 3158; Dec. Dig. § 822.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Dallas County; A. B. Grace and H. W. Wells, Judges.

James York was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and appeals. Affirmed.

Goodwin & McHaney and Herring & Williams, for appellant. Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., and C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BATTLE, J. James York was indicted at the August, 1908, term of the Bradley circuit court, for murder in the first degree, committed by killing Homer McClain, and was tried in the Dallas circuit court, after a transfer of the cause to that court, on the 23d day of June, 1909, and convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and his punishment was fixed at three years' imprisonment in the state penitentiary.

In impaneling the jury to try the defendant the trial court caused the panel of 24 jurors, selected by jury commissioners to serve at the June, 1909, term of the Dallas circuit court, to be sworn, over the objection of the defendant, to answer questions touching their qualifications to serve as jurors in the trial of the defendant, and asked the whole panel "if they believed in capital punishment," and five answered that they did not, and were excused from serving. The court then ordered the sheriff to summon five bystanders to take the places of the five jurors excused, which was done, and the five talesman, over the objection of the defendant, took the places of the five jurors who had been excused, and the names of the panel as thus composed were written upon separate slips of paper, and placed in a box, and the names of the jurors selected to serve as a jury in the case were drawn from the box in the manner provided by the statute.

Did the court commit a reversible error in excusing the five jurors and causing five others to be summoned and substituted in their places?

In Meyer v. State, 19 Ark. 156, a juror was challenged by the defendant for cause. The challenge was overruled. The defendant excepted to the ruling of the court, and stood upon his challenge, and he was sworn as a juror in the case. The court said: "After his competency was determined by the court, the prisoner did not get clear of him by peremptory challenge, but permitting him to be sworn as a juror rested upon his exception to the decision of the court, which he had a right to do"—and held that the trial court erred in overruling the challenge, and for such error in part reversed the judgment of the circuit court, and allowed the defendant a new trial. Since that time this court has uniformly held that if, after a court has erroneously overruled a challenge of a juror for cause, the defendant elected to challenge him peremptorily, he could not avail himself of the error, unless he had exhausted his peremptory challenges, thereby holding that he could protect himself against such error and would not be allowed to suffer by so doing if he exhausted his peremptory challenges before the completion of the jury. Benton v. State, 30 Ark. 328; Wright v. State, 35 Ark. 639; Polk v. State, 45 Ark. 165; Caldwell v. State, 69 Ark. 322, 63 S. W. 59.

In Mabry v. State, 50 Ark. 492, 8 S. W. 823, the regular panel of jurors was exhausted, and the jury in the case remained incomplete,. and bystanders were summoned to complete it, and, over the objection of the defendant on account of the manner in which they were summoned, were sworn as members of the jury. The court said: "When such objection is made, and the record fails, as in this case, to show that the defendant exhausted his peremptory challenges, it is unavailing in the appellate court, because the failure to challenge is an implied admission that the jurors are unobjectionable. * * * The right of peremptory challenges is conferred as a means to reject, not to select, jurors. The object of the law is to obtain a jury impartial to the prisoner and the state alike. Neither has a right to the services of any particular juror. Hurley v. State, 29 Ark. 22. If all the talesmen had been challenged by him, and he had then been forced to accept a juror without the privilege of exercising his right of peremptory challenge, he might have cause to complain. But he has voluntarily taken his chance of acquittal at the hands of jurors whom he might have rejected, and he must abide the issue."

The record in the case at bar does not show that appellant exhausted his peremptory challenges, and, according to the principle upon which the Mabry Case rests, he has no right to complain.

During the progress of the trial in this case, and after all the evidence had been adduced and the instructions had been given by the court, and the opening arguments of both parties had been made by counsel, the Honorable H. W. Wells, circuit judge of the Tenth judicial circuit of the state of Arkansas, and the judge of the Dallas Circuit Court, then presiding in the trial, and the Honorable A. B. Grace, circuit judge of the Eleventh judicial circuit of the state of Arkansas, by an agreement spread upon the record exchanged circuits, the former vacating the bench and the latter immediately occupying it and presiding during the remainder of the trial, and, until the arguments were completed, the motion for new trial was overruled, and the prisoner was sentenced and judgment rendered, and an appeal was prayed and granted.

Did the judges commit a reversible error in exchanging circuits at the time they did?

Section 22 of article 7 of the Constitution of this state provides: "The judges of the circuits may, temporarily, exchange circuits or hold courts for each other, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law." And section 1321 of Kirby's Digest says: "The judges of the circuit courts may by agreement temporarily exchange circuits or hold courts for each other for such length of time as may seem practicable and to the best interest of their respective circuits and courts." And section 1322 provides: "The judges exchanging as aforesaid shall have the same powers and authority, while holding courts for each other, as the judge for the circuit in which term or terms shall be held."

This case is unlike Stokes v. State, 71 Ark. 112, 71 S. W. 248, where the judgment of the circuit court was reversed because the trial judge lost control of the proceedings of the court by his temporary absence. In this case the proceedings of the court were at all times under the direct supervision of a judge fully authorized to control them. We are unable to see that appellant could have been prejudiced by the exchange of the judges unless it be in the decision of questions of evidence. But this could not affect the legality of the exchange, as the witnesses whose testimony may be in question in such cases may be recalled and required to testify what they had stated in the trial, and go through the same course of examination. Bullock v. Neal, 42 Ark. 278. In the case cited this court held that "when the judge at a trial becomes sick and unable to proceed after the evidence is all in, and the instructions have been given to the jury, the trial should proceed under a special judge before the same jury, and without rehearing the testimony." That case is decisive in this; the judge in the case cited being a special judge, and in this case a regular judge vested by the Constitution and the statute with the same powers and authority as the judge of the Dallas circuit court had.

In the trial of appellant the court instructed the jury, over the objection of the appellant, in behalf of the state, in part, as follows:

"(8) In ordinary cases of one person killing another in self-defense it must appear that the danger was so urgent and pressing that in order to save his own life, or to prevent his receiving great bodily injury, the killing of the other was necessary, and it must appear also that the person killed was the assailant, or that the slayer had really and in good faith endeavored to decline any further contest before the mortal blow or injury was given.

"(9) In order to justify the taking of life in self-defense, the party must employ all means within his power consistent with his safety to avoid the danger and avert the necessity."

And at the request of the defendant instructed the jury, in part, as follows:

"(7) The court instructs the jury that if you find from the evidence in this case that the defendant, Jim York, was in his place of business or residence, or was in a place of business where he was in control, in the town of Vick, in Bradley county, Ark., when the killing occurred, as alleged in the indictment, if you find that the killing so alleged did occur, then the court instructs you that the defendant, Jim York, had a right to be in his place of business or residence, and if you find from the evidence that the deceased, Homer McClain, by himself or in company with others, came into the defendant's place of business or residence with the intent of assaulting the defendant or offering him personal violence, or, being in his place of business or residence, formed the intent of assaulting him or offering him personal violence, and by overt acts or words made it appear to defendant that he was in danger of losing his life or of receiving great bodily injury, or that he was about to be assaulted at the hands of deceased, Homer McClain, or at the hands of deceased, in company with others, then the court instructs you that the deceased Homer McClain, and those acting with him, if any, were trespassers, and the defendant had the right to defend himself and act upon the danger as it appeared to him, whether the danger was real or not, and if you believe from the evidence, or if you have a reasonable doubt from the evidence as to whether the deceased, Homer McClain, came to the defendant's place of business or residence with the intent, or being in the defendant's place of business or residence, formed the intent of assaulting the defendant or offering him personal violence, and by any overt act or words gave defendant reasonable grounds to believe from his point of view that he was in danger of being assaulted or receiving personal violence at the hands of deceased, or at the hands of deceased in company with others, and that defendant, while honestly defending himself against such assault or proffered personal violence, and without fault upon his part, killed the deceased by stabbing him, the killing would be justifiable, and under those circumstances you must acquit the defendant."

Appellant contends that the instructions given in behalf of the state conflicts with that given at his request, and should not have been given. Were they prejudicial? All of them were based upon evidence. Those given in behalf of the state were general, and that given at the instance of the defendant was specific, applying the law to the facts as defendant contended they were, and directing the jury to acquit in the event they found the facts to be as stated in the instructions given at the request of the defendant. On the other hand, those given in behalf of the state stated general rules of law without any directions as to the verdict. Construed as a whole, as they should have been, we are unable to see how those given in behalf of the state could have prejudiced the defendant.

The evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict.

Judgment affirmed.

HOLT v. STATE.

1. JURY (§ 110*) — FAILURE TO PEREMPTORILY CHALLENGE.

Any error in not excusing a juror for cause was waived; defendant not having exhausted his peremptory challenges.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 720½*)—TRIAL—ARGUMENT OF STATE'S COUNSEL.

For counsel for the state in argument to denounce defendant as an "assassin and murderer," a mere expression of opinion, while bad form, was not error, especially where, from the standpoint of the state, it was a reasonable deduction from the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1677; Dec. Dig. § 720½.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—ERROR CURED BY INSTRUCTION.

Error, in admitting opinion as to sanity without foundation laid, is cured by instruction that the jury shall not consider the opinion.

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF CONFESSION.

Testimony, erroneously admitted, that when the deputy sheriff said to defendant, after taking him into custody, that it looked like there was a pretty hard case against him, defendant replied, "B. shot a man, and got off with a few months," was not prejudicial, as tending to create an impression that defendant thought lightly of human life, and believed he could kill a man and get off with a few months, in view of the fact that defendant was claiming he acted in self-defense.

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF CONFESSION.

Error in admitting an involuntary confession of the killing was not prejudicial; a prior voluntary confession thereof having been shown, and defendant having as a witness confessed it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3137–3140; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

6. JURY (§ 67*)—DESIGNATING PERSONS TO SUMMON JURORS—DISCRETION.

The trial court has large discretion in determining what is "sufficient cause," within Kirby's Dig. § 2350, providing that it may, for sufficient cause, designate some other person than the sheriff to summon jurors.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Washington County; J. S. Maples, Judge.

John D. Holt was convicted of murder, and appeals. Affirmed.

John D. Holt, pro se. Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., and C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

WOOD, J. Appellant appeals from a judgment of the Washington circuit court convicting him of the crime of murder in the second degree. He was indicted for murder in the first degree. The indictment was in apt language, and correctly charged the offense. The evidence for the state tended to show that appellant on the 6th day of September, 1908, shot and killed one J. W. Murry from ambush. It was shown that Murry a few weeks prior to the killing had accused appellant of stealing watermelons, had cursed appellant, calling him vile names, and had threatened to kill appellant; that this abuse filled appellant with rancor, which on the day of the killing caused him to say that he was going to "get his gun and make him take it back or kill him." There were circumstances tending to show that appellant, while lying in wait, killed Murry as he passed along the highway. Such was the theory of the state. On the other hand, there was evidence tending to prove that appellant met Murry in the public road, and requested him to retract the abusive language he had formerly used toward appellant; that he refused to do so, but made a motion as if to draw a weapon, whereupon appellant shot and killed him instantly. The jury passed upon the conflicting theories to be deduced from the evidence, and it suffices to say that a verdict for murder, even in the first degree, would not have been disturbed by this court. There was some evidence to justify the court in submitting to the jury the question as to whether appellant was seen at the time he fired the fatal shot, and this the court did in proper instructions. There was no evidence to warrant the court in submitting the question as to whether appellant was acting under an insane delusion in taking the life of Murry. There is no proof of delusional insanity in the record, and the trial court properly rejected prayers for appellant seeking to have such issue presented.

Bob Curtis, a talesman, stated on his voir dire that he had a "fixed opinion" as to the defendant's guilt formed from reading newspaper articles, and talking with persons who purported to give the facts in the case. The court over the objection of appellant held that Curtis was a qualified juror. The appellant excepted to the ruling, and peremptorily challenged the juror. Conceding that the answers of the juror prima facie rendered him incompetent, and that, in the absence of further examination into his competency, the court should have excused him for cause, still there is no showing in the record that appellant had exhausted his peremptory challenges. It does not appear, therefore, that appellant was prejudiced by the ruling of the court. It does not appear that by the ruling of the court appellant was compelled to accept some juror that was unsatisfactory to him. The appellant, not having exhausted his peremptory challenges, waived any error the court may have committed in not excusing the juror for cause. York v. State, 121 S. W. 1070; Glenn v. State, 71 Ark. 86, 71 S. W. 254; Caldwell v. State, 69 Ark. 322, 63 S. W. 59.

Counsel for the state denounced the defendant in argument as an "assassin and cold-blooded murderer." The language, at most, could only have been accepted by the jury as the opinion of the zealous prosecutor from his view point of the evidence. The jury had heard all the evidence, and they were sworn to form their opinion from the evidence and the law applicable thereto. It is not probable that a sensible jury would mistake the denunciation of zealous counsel for proof in the case, and be misled thereby to appellant's prejudice. Such arguments are in bad form, but it is not error to permit them, especially under facts and circumstances such as are detailed in this record. K. C. S. Ry. Co. v. Murphy, 74 Ark. 256, 85 S. W. 428. From the standpoint of the state such opinions as the prosecutor expressed were reasonable and legitimate deductions to be drawn from the evidence.

The court permitted witness Carson, the deputy sheriff and jailer, to give his opinion as to the sanity of appellant while he was in jail, when no foundation had been laid for such opinion. But the court cured any error in this by instructing the jury not to consider such opinion in making up their verdict. Carr v. State, 43 Ark. 99; Johnson v. State, 60 Ark. 45, 28 S. W. 792.

It may be conceded that the confession of appellant, made to the deputy sheriff Tod-hunter and constable Boaz after they had taken him into custody, was, under the circumstances detailed by them, not a voluntary confession, and that therefore the court erred in permitting evidence of such confession to go to the jury. But we see nothing in the confession as shown by the testimony of these witnesses that was prejudicial to appellant. The deputy sheriff after taking appellant into custody told him that "it looked like there was a pretty hard case against him." To this appellant replied, "Charley Buck shot a man, and got off with about five months." Appellant urges that this "testimony tended to create in the minds of the jury a belief that this appellant thought lightly of human life, and believed that he could kill a man and get off with a few months as Buck had done." But the testimony could not reasonably have so impressed the jury; for it was but the expression of a hope on the part of appellant that, although his case might seem to the deputy sheriff to be a "pretty hard one," yet, in view of the light punishment Buck had received for killing a man, appellant might also hope to be similarly dealt with. It must be borne in mind that appellant was claiming that he acted in self-defense. In view of this claim, it was but reasonable for him to express the belief, in answer to the deputy's question, that he (appellant) might not fare any worse than Buck had done for killing a man. We do not see that this part of his confession could have prejudiced him. Taking the confession as a whole, it did no more than to connect appellant directly with the killing. The testimony of witness June Lawson shows that appellant confessed to the killing before he was arrested, and before he made the confession to the officers. It is not contended that the confession to June Lawson was involuntary. Appellant also on the witness stand confessed to the killing. That is all that the confession to the officers tends to show. So we are convinced that, although this confession might not have been free and voluntary, evidence of it in the light of the testimony of June Lawson and of appellant himself could not have been prejudicial.

Appellant insists that the court erred in dismissing the duly elected sheriff and his sworn deputy, Carson, and in designating Combs, a bystander, to summons the jury to try the case, and insists that the motion asking for the discharge of the sheriff and Carson did not contain sufficient allegations for said motion to be considered by the court, and the evidence adduced was not sufficient to justify the court in denying the sheriff and his deputy, Carson, the right to summons the jury to try the appellant, and in giving to Combs, a bystander, the right to summons said jury. Section 2350, Kirby's Dig., provides: "The court may, for sufficient cause, designate some other officer or person than the sheriff to summon jurors, the officer or person designated being first duly sworn in open court to discharge the duty faithfully and impartially." The prosecuting attorney moved the court to designate some other than the sheriff to select talesmen to serve as jurors after the regular panel had been exhausted, setting up, among other things, "that J. C. Reed, sheriff of Washington county, is so biased and prejudiced in favor of the defendant in the above-entitled cause that said sheriff will not summon a jury free from bias and prejudice." It was also alleged that "J. C. Reed, sheriff, was related in some degree by affinity or consanguinity to the defendant." The court, after hearing evidence on the motion, granted it and designated J. G. Combs sheriff. It will serve no useful purpose to review the evidence adduced on the hearing of the motion. The trial judge must necessarily have large discretion in determining what is "sufficient cause," in order to carry out the salutary purposes of this statute. The Legislature did not designate what would constitute a "sufficient cause," but wisely left that to the discretion of the trial courts. We find no abuse of the discretion in the present case of which appellant can complain. The jury was duly selected, and it is nowhere shown that any juror selected by the special sheriff was prejudiced against appellant.

We have examined the objections to the rulings of the court in the giving and refusing of prayers for instructions. It could serve no useful purpose to discuss these at length. The charge as a whole is clear, consistent, and exceptionally free from error. It covers accurately every phase of the evidence, and announces familiar principles that have been often repeated in many decisions of this court.

The appellant has had a fair trial. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

SEXTON v. STATE.

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1175*)—APPEAL—PREJUDICE.

Where, in a prosecution for rape, the state's evidence showed that defendant was successful and committed rape if he made any assault at all on prosecutrix, while he denied that he had ever had intercourse with her either with or without her consent, he cannot complain of a conviction of assault with intent to rape.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3179–3182; Dec. Dig. § 1175.*]

2. RAPE (§ 48*)—EVIDENCE—DESCRIPTION OF ACCUSED.

Where an officer who arrested accused for rape testified that, having heard of the crime and having seen defendant, he went to the house where prosecutrix was staying, evidence that she made complaint there, whereupon witness went with her father to procure a warrant for defendant's arrest, was not objectionable as evidence that prosecutrix gave witness the name or description of her assailant, and that, on the strength of this, the witness caused defendant's arrest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 67–69; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 419, 420*)—EVIDENCE—HEARSAY.

An officer making an arrest may testify as to his reason no further than that there was an outcry or information furnished him of the commission of a crime, and that thereupon he proceeded to search for and apprehend the criminal, it being improper for him to testify to hearsay information acquired from prosecutrix as to the description or identity of accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 973–983; Dec. Dig. §§ 419, 420.*]

4. RAPE (§ 48*)—EVIDENCE—COMPLAINT—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

While the state in a prosecution for rape may show that the prosecutrix made complaint of her injury, the facts stated by her in such complaint can only be brought out by accused on cross-examination, unless defendant undertakes to impeach prosecutrix's testimony on the point, when the particular facts may be proved by the prosecution to corroborate her testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 67–69; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

5. RAPE (§ 38*)—CORROBORATION—PRIOR DECLARATIONS OF ACCUSED.

In a prosecution for rape, the state was entitled to prove that some four or five months before the crime was committed accused, while in the custody of the officer, saw prosecutrix, and stated concerning her, "There is a girl I would like to get hold of. I'll be damned if I don't ruin her," and, being asked if he thought he could ruin her, stated, "If I didn't, I would come damn near it," to corroborate prosecutrix's testimony that defendant came to her house about two weeks before he ravished her, and said he wanted to "scuffle with her," but, that when she declined, he went away without attempting to do anything, and, when he returned at the time he ravished her, he said to her, "I've got you now," and threw her down on the bed and ravished her, defendant having denied that he had ever had or tried to have intercourse with her, or that he ever made any improper proposals to her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

6. WITNESSES (§ 329*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Where, in a prosecution for rape, M. testified as defendant's witness that prosecutrix and her father spent the night after the offense was claimed to have been committed at witness' house, and that she made no statement to him that night as to the assault, and on the next morning he heard her ask her father if defendant's father had paid him any money, and defendant attempted to prove by other witnesses that prosecutrix and her father were trying to extort money from defendant's family to prevent prosecution, the state was properly permitted on cross-examination to show that on the evening of the day of the offense prosecutrix went to M.'s house, where her father was at work, and complained that night to M. and his wife of the outrage, and told her father the next day, and that M. received information from his wife the night of the alleged assault, and told prosecutrix's father, advising him to have defendant arrested, and that the father, when told, threatened to kill defendant.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Independence County; Charles Coffin, Judge.

Charles Sexton was convicted of assault with intent to rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Oldfield & Cole, for appellant. Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., and C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

McCULLOCH, C. J. Defendant, Charles Sexton, was indicted for the crime of rape, alleged to have been committed by having carnal knowledge of one Maud Bethel forcibly and against her will, and on trial therefor he was convicted of assault with intent to commit rape, his punishment being fixed by the jury at confinement in the penitentiary for three years.

Maud Bethel testified that the defendant on the day named in the indictment came to her home, and forcibly and against her will had sexual intercourse with her. The defendant denied this, and testified, on the contrary, that he had never had sexual intercourse with Maud Bethel either with or without her consent. The jury settled the issue by their verdict, which the evidence was sufficient to sustain. The tendency of the evidence was to show that the defendant was successful in his attempt and committed the crime of rape, if he made any assault at all on the girl, but the jury released him from the penalty of the higher crime, and found him guilty only of the lower crime of assault with intent to commit rape; and he cannot complain at this leniency. Benton v. State, 78 Ark. 284, 94 S. W. 688; Price v. State, 82 Ark. 25, 100 S. W. 74.

The defendant objected to the introduction of certain testimony by the state, and saved his exceptions to the ruling of the court in admitting it. The first exception insisted on here is that to a portion of the testimony of a witness named Birmingham. This witness see the girl, and, after having heard her complaint, went with her father to procure a warrant for defendant's arrest. The portion of his testimony quoted by counsel for defendant as objectionable is as follows: "Q. Where was it she made the complaint? A. At Riley Milligan's. Q. Who was present? A. Riley Milligan and Riley's wife. Q. In getting a complaint from her at the time, were Riley Milligan and his wife present at the time? A. That she gave me the complaint? Q. Yes. A. Yes; they were both present. Q. If questions were asked her concerning this affair, who asked them? A. Riley Milligan. (Objected to by defendant, overruled, exceptions saved.) Q. Where were you at the time, and where were these other parties at the time she made the complaint? A. I was at Riley Milligan's in the house, or on the little porch between the houses, rather, and they were there, too. Q. What was done in reference to this matter? (Objected to by defendant.) Q. In other words, was the process issued or asked for for the apprehension of this defendant? (Objected to by defendant, overruled, and exceptions saved.) A. Yes, sir. Q. Where did you go after that? A. I went back to the meeting ground, and learned that the boy had his gun and was gone. (Objection sustained.) Q. What did you go to the meeting ground for? A. I went over there for church, and to see if he (defendant) was there, and he was gone. I had understood that he was going over there to meeting." Further statements along the same line were made by the witness, but the above serves to show the part objected to by the defendant. The basis of defendant's objection to this testimony is that, in effect, it was allowing the witness to state that the girl in making her complaint to him gave the name or description of her assailant, and that on the strength of it the witness at once caused a warrant of arrest to be issued for the defendant's apprehension. Such is not, we think, the effect of his statements. He merely stated that she made complaint in his presence, and that immediately thereafter he went with her father to procure a warrant. His testimony does not show that he obtained from her information as to her assailant's identity, for he expressly stated that, before he went to see the girl, he had already heard about the commission of the crime, and had been over to defendant's house to see him. This court in a similar case said: "The rule on this subject is that the officer making the arrest, as in this case, should testify on the stand no further as to his reason for seeking and arresting the criminal than that there was an outcry or information furnished him in other ways of the commission of the crime, for his use in making the arrest, but not for his use as a witness; for it is but hearsay after all." Davis v. State, 63 Ark. 470, 39 S. W. 356. In Williams v. State, 66 Ark. 264, 50 S. W. 517, Judge Riddick, speaking for the court, stated the law on the subject to be as follows: "It is competent on a charge of rape for the state to show that the prosecuting witness made complaint of her injury, but the particular facts stated by her are not admissible on direct examination. They may be brought out by defendant on cross-examination; and, if the defendant denies that the prosecuting witness made complaint, and undertakes to impeach the testimony on that point, then the particular facts stated by her may be proved by the prosecution, in order to confirm her testimony that she made complaint." To the same effect, see Skaggs v. State, 88 Ark. 602, 113 S. W. 346. We are of the opinion that the testimony admitted in this case does not offend against the rules of law stated in the cases cited above, and that no error was committed in this respect.

The next assignment of error is as to the admission of the testimony of the witness Tom Wilson concerning an alleged remark made about the girl Maud Bethel four or five months before the crime is said to have been committed. The testimony objected to is as follows: "I had defendant under arrest, and we passed where the girl and three smaller children were in the field playing. As we passed, we spoke to the girl, and he said: 'There is a girl I would like to get hold of. I'll be damned if I don't ruin her.' I asked him if he thought he could ruin her, and he said: 'If I didn't, I would come damn near it.'" This testimony is first objected to on the ground that it is not shown definitely that the remarks applied to the prosecutrix; but we are of the opinion that it is shown by the testimony of this witness that under the circumstances the remarks must have applied to this girl. He evidently was referring to a girl of sufficient age for sexual intercourse, and the others in the party were small children, to whom the remarks could have had no application. We think, also, that the testimony was competent as tending to corroborate the testimony of the prosecutrix; for the remark of the defendant was a declaration as to the sinister purpose which he harbored at that time, and the girl's testimony tends to show that he afterwards put his atrocious design into execution. She stated that the defendant came to her house on an occasion about two weeks before he ravished her, and said he wanted to "scuffle with her," but that she declined, and he went away without attempting to do anything, and that at the time he ravished her he came again to the house, and when he came in said, "I've got you now," and threw her down on the bed and ravished her. He denied that he had ever had intercourse with her or had ever tried to do so, or had ever made any improper proposals to her.

The only other assignment of error is as to matter brought out by the prosecuting attorney on cross-examination of Riley Milligan. Maud Bethel testified that on the evening of the day the defendant ravished her she went to Milligan's house where her father was at work, and there spent the night; that she told Milligan and his wife that night of the outrage perpetrated on her, and told her father the next day. Milligan was called to the witness stand by the defendant, and testified in chief that Maud and her father spent the night in question at his house, but that she made no statement to him that night concerning the assault on her; that the next morning he heard her ask her father if Mr. Sexton, defendant's father, had paid him any money. The defendant had attempted to prove by other witnesses that Maud and her father were trying to extort money out of the Sextons to prevent prosecution; and the prosecuting attorney was permitted to show by Milligan on cross-examination that he received information through his wife that night of the alleged assault on the girl by defendant, and that he told the girl's father of it that night and advised him to have the defendant arrested; that the girl's father when told of the outrage threatened to get his gun and kill the defendant. We think this was legitimate cross-examination. The witness had stated in his examination in chief that the witness and her father had spent the night in his, Milligan's, home without anything being said about the assault, and that the next morning they were heard talking about getting money from defendant's father. The cross-examination developed the fact that the witness received that night full information concerning the outrage, and communicated it to the girl's father, whose indignation was aroused to a high pitch and that the witness advised the prosecution of the defendant.

We are unable to discover anything in the testimony which was prejudicial to the defendant except the contradiction of his witness Milligan, and that was legitimate.

Judgment affirmed.

HAYNES-LANGENBERG MFG. CO. v. HOUSER et al.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Oct. 19, 1909.)

TRIAL (§ 143*)—QUESTIONS OF LAW OR FACT—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence of two sets of witnesses is conflicting, the issue is for the jury.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Matt G. Reynolds, Judge.

Action by the Haynes-Langenberg Manufacturing Company against Thomas V. Houser, Joseph L. Mount, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and Mount and others appeal. Affirmed.

John B. Dempsey and Conrad Paeben, for appellants. Carl Otto, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. Suit for debt against the defendant Houser, principal contractor, and to enforce a lien against the lot of buildings erected thereon against the other defendants, as owners of the property. There was conflicting evidence as to the date of completion and acceptance of the work and machinery.

Error is assigned on the refusal of the court to instruct the jury to find for defendants—outside of defendant Houser—against plaintiffs' claim for a mechanic's lien, to the instructions given, and to the verdict sustaining the lien. An examination of the record as set out in the abstract fails to sustain any of these assignments. The main question in the case is one of fact, involving the date of completion of the work or acceptance of it as complete, and as to whether the lien account was filed within four months thereafter. If one set of witnesses gave the facts and dates correctly, the lien should stand. If the other set is followed, the verdict and judgment are wrong. This presented an issue for the jury, who were correctly instructed, and found for the debt as well as the lien—in fact, Houser, the contractor debtor defendant, does not appeal.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

COFFMAN et al. v. GATES et al.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Oct. 19, 1909.)

1. PARTITION (§ 39*)—SUIT IN EQUITY—JURISDICTION.

A partition suit which deals with equitable estates and interests is in equity, and a court of chancery has jurisdiction over it notwithstanding the statutory remedy in partition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Cent. Dig. §§ 93–96; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 210*)—EQUITY—DEMURRER.

A demurrer to an amended answer and cross-bill in a suit in equity, which does not raise a question against the sufficiency of the pleadings, but which alleges new matter in pais, is improper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Dec. Dig. § 210.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1195*)—LAW OF THE CASE.

The decision on appeal that the circuit court in partition in equity has jurisdiction to reimburse one holding an interest in the land in fee and the remainder in trust for expenses incurred in defending an action in ejectment determines his right to reimbursement, and a pleading after amendment demanding reimbursement in a larger sum is not demurrable.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Daniel G. Taylor, Judge.

Petition by Ella Gates Coffman and others against John J. Gates and others for partition, in which James C. Ghio files a cross-bill. From a judgment for James C. Ghio on his cross-bill defendants Mary E. Layton and others appeal. Affirmed.

Geo. E. Smith, for appellants. W. B. & Ford W. Thompson, for respondents.

GOODE, J. This case was here on appeal before, and the report of the decision is in 110 Mo. App. 475, 85 S. W. 657, where a full statement of the intricate facts out of which the controversy grew will be found. To make our present decision intelligible, it is necessary to restate the case in part. John B. Ghio died in 1885, leaving a will wherein he devised and bequeathed his property to three executors and trustees, namely, his widow, Elizabeth, his son James C., this respondent, and William Booth. The will is not before us, but from statements in the briefs and recitals in the record it appears said executors had power to lend the funds of the estate, and lent $10,000 to Jacob and Lavina Gates, taking notes from the borrowers secured by a deed of trust on a tract of land in St. Louis county known as the "Gates farm." There was also a residuary bequest (we suppose after paying debts and specific legacies) to said executors as trustees, with the direction to divide the residue of the estate into three equal portions, of which one part should be turned over to James C. Ghio, one-third be held for Mary X. Barada, wife of Francis X. Barada, for her life and then to go to her children in fee, and one-third be held for Mary O. Cummisky. The portions of said Mary Barada and Mary Cummisky were bequeathed to the trustees for certain uses set forth in the will. The Gates loan of $10,000 was part of the residue of the estate, and hence was subject to the trusts declared in the will. The loan made to the Gateses by the executors and trustees was not paid, and there was a foreclosure under the deed of trust. By agreement of the parties in interest, James C. Ghio, one of the three residuary legatees under the will, was appointed to purchase the property at the foreclosure sale, to take and hold as provided in the will of his father, to wit, an undivided one-third of the property so purchased in fee, and the other undivided two-thirds in trust, one-third for Mary Barada and her children, and one-third for Mary Cummisky. He made the purchase at the foreclosure sale, and the trustee in the deed of trust executed a conveyance to him, setting out the capacity in which he bought and took title to the land. The interests of Mary Barada and her children and of Mary Cummisky were subject to sale and conveyance only by the trustees named in John B. Ghio's will and according to its provisions. James C. Ghio took possession of the land thus purchased, and collected the rents and profits for himself as one of the parties in interest and as trustee for Mary Barada and Mary Cummisky, the other parties. Subsequently Mary Barada died, and her children inherited her interest. While James C. Ghio was in possession on these terms, actions of ejectment were instituted against him by the children and heirs of one John Gates, deceased. There was a great deal of litigation between said Gates heirs and Ghio. He succeeded in defeating some of the actions instituted by them, but one ejectment suit was successful to the extent that Ella Gates, daughter of John Gates, recovered an undivided eleven-sixteenths of the land and $2,165 damages for its detention and $35 for the monthly rents and profits. Said ejectment action was instituted against William and Albert Seibert, who were tenants under James C. Ghio. Ghio defended the litigation instituted by the Gates heirs, both in behalf of himself and in behalf of his co-owners, the cestuis que trustent, Mary Barada and her children and Mary Cummisky. In doing this Ghio paid a considerable sum of money for attorney fees and costs, besides paying, in the long run, some $4,062 on the judgment in favor of Ella Gates in the ejectment suit; the rents and profits having accumulated during the appeal to the Supreme Court. Ghio gave an appeal bond in that case, and was compelled in an action on his bond to pay the judgment. Subsequently Ghio brought an action for himself and also for the trustees as co-owners with him, which resulted in Ella Gates relinquishing a portion of her interest in the premises, and in that suit, too, Ghio incurred expenses in behalf of his co-owners. Ella Gates married a man named Coffman, and she and her husband and C. N. Travous, who acquired an interest in the land from her, instituted this action against the other owners for a partition. Among the defendants when the decree distributing the proceeds of the land came to be entered were James C. Ghio, Mary Harbaugh, and Mary E. Layton. By consent of parties an interlocutory decree in partition was given defining the interests of all the owners. The land was ordered sold. This was done, and the sale approved. The decree found James C. Ghio as an individual was entitled to five forty-eighths interest in the proceeds of the sale, and Mary Harbaugh, Andrew Barada, and Mary E. Layton were allowed their distributive shares. Ghio had filed an answer and cross-bill, in which he set up the amount he had paid in consequence of the judgment in ejectment in favor of Ella Gates, and in prosecuting and defending the litigation he had conducted with the Gates heirs, both for himself and as trustee for his co-owners, and alleged the interests of Mary Harbaugh, Andrew Barada, and Mary Layton in the proceeds of the sale should be charged, respectively, with certain sums on account of said expenses; the other defendants in whose behalf Ghio had litigated having already contributed their proportion of what he had been compelled to pay. The court denied his claim, and ordered the distributive shares of those persons paid to them, and Ghio appealed to this court. The decision on the appeal was that James C. Ghio had acted in good faith in bearing the expense and trouble of the litigation with the Gates heirs, both for himself and the parties jointly interested with him, and that he was entitled in equity to contribution from them as claimed in his answer and cross-bill. It was further determined that the jurisdiction of the circuit court in the proceeding was of an equitable nature and it had power to adjust the claims of all the parties in interest, citing certain cases, among them Holloway v. Holloway, 97 Mo. 628, 11 S. W. 233, 10 Am. St. Rep. 339. Other cases were cited to show the right of one in good faith who maintains litigation to protect a fund in which he is jointly interested with others to be reimbursed his outlay. This partition suit is not a statutory one, but was in equity; for it dealt with equitable estates and interests, and the jurisdiction of courts of chancery over suits of that nature has not been ousted by our statutory remedy in partition. Holloway v. Holloway, supra. The judgment of the circuit court against Ghio's right to recover was reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to proceed with it in accordance with the opinion. After the case was remanded, James C. Ghio filed an amended answer and cross-bill, which in no way differed from the one first filed and passed on by this court, except the amounts of certain items of expense, which had been incorrectly stated in the first answer and cross-bill, were changed. The appellants filed a demurrer to the amended answer which was overruled. They refused to plead further. The court entered final judgment in favor of James C. Ghio, and this appeal was taken.

The grounds of demurrer are that the pleading does not state a cause of action, improperly unites two causes of action, one in favor of James C. Ghio as an individual and the other in favor of him as a trustee, requiring different issues, proofs, and judgments; that the affirmative matter pleaded in the answer was not a defense or a counterclaim against the plaintiffs, and had no relation to the subject-matter of the partition suit; that the case stated in the answer was not a cross-bill within the rules of chancery practice, but a new proceeding not germane to the partition suit, and then alleged final distribution had been ordered January 7, 1903, and after this the court had no further power or jurisdiction to hear and determine other issues in the cause nor to enter a further and second final decree. The last ground of the demurrer makes that document a "speaking demurrer," because, instead of raising a question against the sufficiency of defendant's answer, it alleges new matter in pais, which cannot be done. Story's Eq. Plead. (10th Ed.) § 448. It is apparent from the statement of the other grounds of demurrer that they were all adjudicated on the former appeal wherein we cited authorities to show such equities of the parties to a partition suit as are here involved might be settled in the suit by a court of chancery jurisdiction. Having ruled James C. Ghio was entitled to compensation on a pleading identical with the one now before us, except as to amounts, there is nothing for us to consider. It is true Ghio in his individual right was a party to the litigation with the Gates heirs, as well as in his capacity of trustee for Mary Barada and her heirs and Mary Cummisky, and as an individual would have no claim for contribution. Suffice to say he asks none, but only as trustee.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

BREEDING v. NELSON.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Oct. 19, 1909.)

1. REPLEVIN (§ 116*)—APPEAL—DISMISSAL.

Where defendant in replevin, who appealed from a justice's judgment, was in possession of the property, he had no absolute right to dismiss his appeal, and thereby escape an order for the return of the property or judgment against him and his sureties on the appeal bond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Cent. Dig. § 446; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 299*)—MODIFICATION AT SUCCEEDING TERM OF COURT.

The rule that, when final judgment is entered at one term, it cannot be altered or modified at the succeeding term, is subject to the qualification that, if a motion to modify is filed at the term when the judgment was entered, and is carried over to the next term without a ruling, it may be disposed of at the subsequent term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 583; Dec. Dig. § 299.*]

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§§ 166, 189*)—JUDGMENTS — ORDERS — CONSTRUCTION — MODIFICATION.

In replevin before a justice, plaintiff had judgment for a return of the property, and defendant was given a lien for the expenses of caring for the property. Defendant appealed, but thereafter moved to dismiss the appeal, which was done at the April term. Subsequently plaintiff moved to set aside the dismissal, and for an affirmance of the judgment. This motion was not disposed of at the April term, but went over to the June term, when the court entered an order reciting the submission, and adjudging that the judgment of the justice be affirmed, and plaintiff recover the property, defendant to recover from plaintiff the amount originally adjudged for expenses, for which sum a lien was declared. Held, that the intention was to sustain the motion to set aside the dismissal and then enter judgment of affirmance, and in substance, this was the effect of the order, though the court did not in words sustain the motion nor order the dismissal set aside, and therefore the appeal was to be treated as though the cause stood at the June term and thereafter for action, relieved from the obstacle of a judgment rendered at a previous term, so that the court had jurisdiction of the cause at the June term, could enter judgment of affirmance, and afterwards, during such term, modify the judgment if it saw proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 646, 733; Dec. Dig. §§ 166, 189.*]

4. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 166*)—APPEAL—DISMISSAL—REINSTATEMENT.

Rev. St. 1899, § 672 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 686), provides that a judgment shall not be stayed, reversed, or impaired for any mispleading, miscontinuance, or discontinuance, insufficient pleading, jeofail, or misjoining issue. Held, that where defendant, instead of adhering to his original position that a judgment dismissing his appeal from a justice's judgment precluded any further action after a motion to set aside such judgment had been withdrawn, submitted evidence and participated in the trial in the appellate court on the merits, the judgment of dismissal was to be considered as set aside, though the record failed to show except inferentially that this was done.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Geo. H. Shields, Judge.

Action by Enoch Breeding, trustee, etc., against E. H. Nelson. From the judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This appeal calls into question the jurisdiction of the circuit court when the judgment appealed from was rendered. The action is replevin, and was begun before a justice of the peace, where it resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff for the property, subject to a lien found to exist in favor of defendant. The judgment pronounced was that plaintiff recover from defendant the property, and defendant recover from plaintiff $323.30, for expenses incident to the property, for which sum a lien was declared, and execution was ordered to enforce payment if it was not voluntarily made. An appeal was taken to the circuit court, where, at the April term, 1906, and on May 22d, the defendant, who was appellant in said court, appeared and moved to dismiss the appeal, and the court entered an order dismissing it at defendant's cost. On May 31st following plaintiff moved to set aside the dismissal of the appeal previously made at the request of de-erty had always remained in possession of defendant, a dismissal of the appeal would operate to release the sureties on the appeal bond, throw the plaintiff back for recovery of his property on the judgment of the justice, and subject to a lien declared in defendant's favor. Said motion of plaintiff to set aside the judgment of dismissal and for a judgment of affirmance was not disposed of at the April term, but went over to the June term, and on July 9th, of the latter term, was submitted to the court. The court entered an order reciting the submission, and that the court had heard and considered the motion, and it appearing from an inspection of the record that on May 22d the court, at defendant's motion, had dismissed the appeal, it was considered and adjudged that the judgment of the justice entered December 7, 1905, be in all things affirmed, and plaintiff have and recover from the defendant and his sureties on the appeal bond the property in question, and defendant recover from plaintiff the sum of $323 for expenses connected with the property, and for that sum a lien was declared. It will be observed the court did not in words sustain the motion plaintiff had filed to set aside the judgment of dismissal, nor order the dismissal set aside, but affirmed the justice's judgment. Afterwards, and during the June term, to wit, September 29, 1906, plaintiff by counsel filed a motion to amend the entry of July 9th, affirming the judgment of the justice. The grounds of this motion were that the judgment of the justice contained a finding of $323 in favor of defendant on his counterclaim for keeping the property and declared a lien for said sum; that this part of the justice's judgment, as well as the other, was affirmed by the circuit court; that a finding in defendant's favor on the counterclaim was a variance from the court's own finding of facts, and was not justified or supported, but was without warrant of law, because the court had "no jurisdiction to render an affirmative judgment for money damages against the plaintiff on her counterclaim in her replevin suit." The court was asked to strike out the portion of its judgment of affirmance in respect of the counterclaim, or else to vacate the judgment of affirmance entirely and set the cause down for trial. This motion passed over from the June to the October term, 1906, and on November 20th was sustained by setting aside the prior judgment of affirmance. The effect of this order was that the judgment rendered at the June term, 1906, affirming the judgment of the justice, was set aside at the October term. Thereafter, at the same term and on November 26th, plaintiff, by leave of court, withdrew the motion he had filed at the April term, to wit, May 26, 1906, to affirm the judgment of the justice of the peace, and filed a motion to assess value of property." It began by reciting plaintiff, by leave of court, had withdrawn his motion to set aside the dismissal and affirm the judgment of the justice of the peace, and, in lieu of said motion, filed a motion, the contents of which we abridge. It recited the nature of the action, and that it was for the recovery of two vehicles and a horse detained by the defendant under an alleged liveryman's lien for board and keep, and then recited the judgment of the justice, the taking of the appeal by defendant, and the dismissal of the appeal on May 22d. It next averred the judgment of the justice was incomplete and of no avail against the sureties on the appeal bond because it did not set forth and determine in the alternative the value of the property wrongfully detained. The value is then alleged; i. e., that the one-horse wagon involved in the controversy was worth $150 and the runabout $175. Nothing is said about the value of the mare, though the justice had found plaintiff was entitled to the possession of a bay mare. The motion then proceeded to state the latter part of the justice's judgment, which was in favor of defendant and against plaintiff on the counterclaim, and alleged it was given without warrant of law, as the justice had no jurisdiction to render judgment for money damages in a replevin suit. The court was asked to hear evidence as to the value of the wagon and runabout, and render judgment against defendant and his sureties on his appeal bond, affirming the judgment of the justice touching plaintiff's ownership of the two vehicles and right of possession, and adjudging plaintiff have and recover from defendant and his sureties in the alternative the sum of $325, the value of said vehicles so detained; further, that the court render judgment against plaintiff and in favor of defendant for the mare, but that plaintiff have and recover of defendant his costs. It will be seen said motion called on the court to try the case and determine the rights between the parties. It was continued to the April term, 1907. At the April term the court entered an order purporting to sustain the motion and set the cause down for hearing. A term bill of exceptions was filed, and afterwards, at the June term, 1907, the court rendered a judgment in which it recited the cause had come on "for hearing for assessment of the value of the personal property in controversy," and described in the statement as a one-horse wagon and a one-horse runabout. The court found the value of the former at $85 and the latter at $75, or a total of $160, and ordered the judgment of the justice affirmed in part, and that plaintiff recover of defendant the possession of the wagon and runabout, or, at his election, the value of the property so assessed and this recovery be against defendant and his sureties on his appeal bond. It was further adjudged that defendant have and retain possession of the horse sued for and described in the complaint.

Geo. W. Lubke and Geo. W. Lubke, Jr., for appellant. Herbert N. Arnstein, Warren Hilton, and Peers & Peers, for respondent.

GOODE, J. (after stating the facts as above). As defendant, who appealed from the justice of the peace, was in possession of the property, he had no absolute right to dismiss his appeal, and thereby escape an order for a return of the property or judgment against him and his sureties on the appeal bond. Munley v. King, 40 Mo. App. 531. It is a sound proposition of law, as contended by defendant's counsel, that, when final judgment is entered in a cause at one term, it cannot be altered or modified at the succeeding term. But this rule is subject to the qualification that if a motion to modify is filed at the term when the judgment was entered, and is carried over to the next term without a ruling, it may be disposed of at the subsequent term. Harkness v. Jarvis, 182 Mo. 231, 81 S. W. 446. If the court at the June term had expressly ordered the judgment of dismissal entered at the April term set aside in accordance with plaintiff's motion, there could be no question that the whole case would have been reopened for further proceedings. By inadvertence the court affirmed the judgment of the justice without expressly setting aside the dismissal, instead of setting it aside and then entering the affirmance. But the entire tenor of the order made at the June term shows the intention was to sustain the motion to set aside the dismissal and then enter judgment of affirmance; and, considered according to its substance, this was the effect of the order. Lane v. Dowd, 172 Mo. 167, 72 S. W. 632. Therefore the appeal should be treated as though the cause stood at the June term and thereafter for action relieved from the obstacle of a judgment rendered at a previous term. Hence the court had jurisdiction of the cause at the June term, could enter judgment of affirmance, and afterward, and during said term, might modify this judgment if it saw proper. Plaintiff filed a motion to have it modified, which motion went over to the October term; and under the authority of Harkness v. Jarvis and the settled rule might be acted on at that term. And so the proceeding continued until it was finally heard on the evidence adduced by the respective parties.

The question of jurisdiction now raised may be considered from another point of view. Instead of standing on the position he took that the judgment of dismissal at the April term precluded any further action after the motion to set aside said judgment had been withdrawn, defendant submitted evidence and took part in the trial on the merits. The fifth clause of the statute of jeofails says the judgment in a cause shall not be stayed, reversed, or impaired "for any mispleading, miscontinuance or discontinuance, insufficient pleading, jeofail or misjoining issue." Rev. St. 1899, § 672 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 686). In Thurman v. James, 48 Mo. 235, that clause of the statute was construed when the point in dispute was precisely the one here. The cause had been dismissed and the record failed to show, except inferentially, that the judgment of dismissal had been set aside. The court held a dismissal amounted to a discontinuance within the meaning of the statute, and, as the parties had afterwards submitted themselves to the jurisdiction, this prior discontinuance did not affect the subsequent proceedings. It was also said the order of dismissal ought to be considered as having been set aside, inasmuch as the parties appeared and went to trial and the court took jurisdiction of the case, and rendered judgment in it.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

REYNOLDS, P. J. This action was commenced by attachment and summons. On the trial of the plea in abatement, under the direction of the court, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendants, and on a trial on the merits the court instructed that plaintiffs could not recover. They took a nonsuit with leave to move to set the same aside, which motion was duly filed and overruled.

that it nowhere appears in the record proper that any term bill covering the proceedings at the trial of the plea in abatement was filed, and that it nowhere appears in the record proper that a bill of exceptions was filed covering the proceedings at the trial on the merits. An examination of the printed abstract, the case being here on what is known as "short record or transcript," sustains their claims. All that appears in the abstract are recitals in the two bills of exception that they were signed and filed and made of record. This court and our Supreme Court have held, in too many cases to require citation for the education and information of the profession, that a bill of exceptions cannot prove itself, and that there must be proper entries, abstracted in the record itself, to establish those facts. Much as we dislike to dispose of a case on what appear as mere technicalities, we are bound by the decisions of our own and of the Supreme Court to do so in a clear case such as this.

Finding no error in the record proper, the judgments of the circuit court on the plea in abatement, as well as on the case on its merits, must be, and are, affirmed. All concur.

WILSON v. UNITED RYS. CO. OF ST. LOUIS.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Oct. 19, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — DIRECTING VERDICT.

In an action by a servant for injuries received while helping to move a car partly loaded with ties, where it was not conclusively shown that he was careless in a way that helped bring about the accident, it was not error to refuse to direct a verdict for defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1089–1132; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 217*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT — NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER — ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

Plaintiff, a servant, was standing upon a pile of ties, which had been loaded upon a car under the direction of defendant's foreman, in the act of reversing the trolley, when the pile gave way and he was injured. He was acting under the commands of the foreman at the time. The evidence for plaintiff tended to show that the ties were negligently piled. Held, that the neglect of the master to furnish a reasonably safe place for a servant to work, though with the servant's knowledge, does not make the danger arising therefrom a risk assumed by the servant.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 291*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, in an action by a servant for personal injuries, which, after setting out the different acts of negligence, required the jury to find they occurred, "thereby directly contributing to cause plaintiff's said injuries," was erroneous for failing to require a finding that those acts caused the injuries, since the defense of contributory negligence was in the case, and there was no evidence to prove the accident was in any degree the intervening act of a third person, or of a force of nature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1145; Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Geo. H. Shields, Judge.

Action by John C. Wilson against the United Railways Company of St. Louis. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Boyle & Priest and T. E. Francis, for appellant. A. R. & Howard Taylor, for respondent.

GOODE, J. This plaintiff was hurt while working at his task as an employé of defendant company, and brought this action to recover damages. He was helping move a car load of ties at the time. The car had been run on a spur track to be loaded with ties, and was stopped at a short depression in the track, which caused the rear end to be lower than the front, and the car stood tilted. It was a flat car about 36 feet long and 9 feet wide. The ties were 7 feet long and perhaps 6 inches thick, and were placed lengthwise across the car. At the west or rear end were braces against which the ties rested; but there were no braces at the front. At that end was what is called a "vestibule," containing the controller and other appliances used in operating the trolley car. We understand a full load of ties, or 250, would have extended the load forward to where it would be supported by braces connected with the vestibule. The car was started before it was fully loaded, there being but 232 ties on it, leaving a space 4 feet wide between the front end of the load and the vestibule. The testimony differs as to the manner in which the front end of the pile was built up. The proper manner, according to the witnesses, would have been to "step the ties"; that is, have them ascend like stairs, the first tie of each layer from the bottom retreating the width of one tie. The testimony for plaintiff goes to show this was not done, but the load was built up perpendicularly in front; whereas, the witnesses for defendant testified it was "stepped." The pile remained in position as long as the car was stationary with its rear lower than the front; but when it started the motorman ran it very rapidly, and after leaving the spur, and as plaintiff was in the act of reversing the trolley so the car would move in another direction, the pile of ties gave way at the front end, letting him fall to the floor and falling on him, breaking his left ankle and inflicting other injuries. It is conceded plaintiff was performing his duty at the time, and was not out of place on top of the pile; in fact, he had to climb there to manipulate the trolley. But it is contended he caused the pile of ties to topple and fall by carelessly stepping on those right at the end of the pile, and, perhaps, an inference of negligence on his part which contributed to the injury might have been drawn by the jury from the evidence. This defense was interposed by answer, and also that plaintiff assumed the risk. The acts of negligence assigned in the petition are failure of defendant's foreman in charge of the work to cause the pile of ties to be blocked or fastened at the front so as to prevent them from falling; ordering the car to be moved while in a negligent condition, by which we understand the pleader to mean, before the load was complete or braced; and in ordering plaintiff to go on the car and ties and operate the trolley while the pile was negligently unbraced.

The court refused to direct a verdict for defendant as requested, and in this no error was committed, for it is certain plaintiff was not conclusively shown to have been careless in a way that helped bring about the accident, and neither did he assume the risk of injury from the ties having been piled carelessly and insecurely and the car being moved by the direction of the foreman while they were piled thus. The work of loading the ties was done under the eye of the foreman, and plaintiff was obeying his command when hurt. Therefore there can be no question about defendant being in fault if the ties were carelessly built up and in a way to endanger plaintiff unnecessarily. But it is argued if the pile was perpendicular, as he said, the danger was obvious, and he took the risk. This point need not be elaborated, for it is settled by Wendler v. House Fur. Co., 165 Mo. 527, 65 S. W. 737; Curtis v. McNair, 173 Mo. 270, 73 S. W. 167; Blundell v. Elevator Co., 189 Mo. 552, 88 S. W. 103. The case of Hager v. Railroad, 207 Mo. 302, 105 S. W. 744, is invoked as having altered the rule in regard to the assumption of the risk; but it does not alter it in a manner relevant to the present case, if at all. The fact which suffices to distinguish this controversy from that one is that it was not incumbent on defendant to move the car in question while it was in an insecure and dangerous condition, and plaintiff was not engaged by defendant to assist in any such work; whereas, the court found from the evidence in the Hager Case it was the duty of the Terminal Association and its employés to remove and transfer cars whether said cars were in good or bad order (loc. cit., page 316 of 207 Mo., 105 S. W. 744). We understand it was part of Hager's regular employment to work about cars in bad order, and presumably more unsafe than those in good order.

The judgment must be reversed because in the first and main instruction for plaintiff, after the different acts of negligence had been hypothesized, the jury was required to find they occurred, "thereby directly contributing to cause plaintiff's said injuries," instead of finding those acts caused the injuries. As the defense of contributory negligence was in the case, and there was no evidence to prove the accident was in any degree the intervening act of a third person, or of a force of nature, this form of instruction falls within the decisions of Hof v. Transit Co., 213 Mo. 445, 111 S. W. 1166, and Krehmeyer v. Transit Co. (Mo.) 120 S. W. 78.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded. All concur.

GROSHONG v. UNITED RYS. CO. OF ST. LOUIS.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Oct. 19, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 2, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 315*) — STREET RAILROADS — TIME TO ALIGHT—PETITION.

Where, in an action for injuries to a passenger by the premature starting of a street car, plaintiff's petition did not aver that a signal was given to stop the car on the west side of a cross-street, or that that was the regular stopping place, but only charged that plaintiff signaled the operating servants to stop the car at the intersection of certain streets "a regular stopping place for the discharge of passengers," and that the car stopped there, plaintiff was not committed to the theory that the west side of the street intersection was the regular stopping place for the discharge of east-bound passengers, nor was she required to prove the same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1281; Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—INJURY TO PASSENGER—INSTRUCTIONS—THEORY OF CAUSE.

Where, in an action for injuries to a street car passenger by an alleged premature start, plaintiff did not allege that the west side of a street intersection was the customary stopping place for the discharge of east-bound passengers, the court's refusal of plaintiff's request, failing to hypothesize as an element of plaintiff's proof that the west side of the intersection was the regular stopping place, and the giving of an instruction for defendant that if the jury believed the regular stopping place was on the east side of the intersection, and that there was no regular stopping place on the west side, it was plaintiff's duty to wait until the car reached the east side of the street, and, if her injuries were caused by her attempt to alight before such point was reached, while the car was in motion, she could not recover, was error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1335; Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—PREMATURE START.

Where the gist of a passenger's case was that the street car was halted to let her alight in obedience to her signal, and was negligently started while she was doing so, she was entitled to have the jury pass on the weight of the evidence supporting such case, though she was in error as to her claim that the car always stopped at the west side of the street intersection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1335; Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 262*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

The insertion in an instruction requested by plaintiff of a requirement that the jury must find that the west side of a street intersection was the regular stopping place for streets cars traveling in the direction plaintiff was going at the time she was injured in attempting to alight did not preclude her from having the case submitted to the jury in another instruction, to the effect that, if the car was halted in obedience to her signal to permit her to alight, and was started carelessly while she was doing so, she was entitled to recover, regardless of the question whether the car had stopped at its usual stopping place.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 661; Dec. Dig. § 262.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 303*)—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—PREMATURE START.

Where a street car stopped at a crossing in response to a signal that a passenger desired to alight, there was a fair inference that the operatives knew, or should have known, that some person desired to alight, and should have exercised care not to start until assured that no one was in the act of alighting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1216–1243; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

6. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—TIME TO ALIGHT—NEGLIGENCE.

An instruction omitting to require the jury to find that the crew in charge of the car from which plaintiff attempted to alight when injured by an alleged premature start knew or by ordinary care could or should have known before starting the car that she was attempting to alight was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1326; Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

7. CARRIERS (§ 280*)—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—CARE REQUIRED.

An instruction only requiring of the carrier's servants the use of ordinary care to prevent injury to a passenger calls for a standard of care below the legal requirement.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Geo. H. Shields, Judge.

Action by Fannie Groshong against the United Railways Company of St. Louis. From an order granting plaintiff a new trial after verdict against her, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Boyle & Priest and Glendy B. Arnold, for appellant. John A. Talty and Selleck & Sanders, for respondent.

GOODE, J. This appeal comes here from an order granting plaintiff a new trial after a verdict against her. The order said the new trial was allowed "on the ground that the court had erred * * * in admitting on behalf of defendant, and over the objection of plaintiff, incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant evidence." But we are more impressed by another error now assigned in support of the order. Counsel for plaintiff insists the court erred in ruling on instructions; and, to pass on this proposition, the pleadings and evidence must be noticed. Plaintiff resided at No. 1637 Washington avenue, St. Louis, and about noon of the day of the accident took an east-bound car on that avenue to go to the office of a physician at No. 1230 Olive street. When the car reached a point between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets, which run north and south intersecting Washington avenue, she pushed an electric signal button, notifying the conductor of her wish to alight at Twelfth street. In response to the signal, the car came to a stop at the west crossing of Twelfth and Washington avenue. She testified she had ridden frequently on that line of cars, it always stopped at the west crossing of Twelfth street, and she always got off there. On the day of the accident, as she was leaving the rear platform, and while she had one foot on the step and was about to put the other on the street, still holding to a handrail, the car started, throwing her to the ground and injuring her. This is her story of the occurrence. The testimony for defendant tended to prove plaintiff attempted to get off the car while it was in motion; that no stop was made at the west crossing of Twelfth street and Washington avenue, but she attempted to alight while the car was crossing over Twelfth street, falling about one-third of the way from the tracks which ran north and south on Twelfth street and the west sidewalk of said street—that is to say, the car, when she stepped off, had not proceeded east on Washington avenue as far as the tracks which ran along Twelfth street and which it would have to cross, but had only traversed two-thirds of the distance of Twelfth street to those tracks. The evidence further tended to prove the cars never stopped at the west crossing of Twelfth street and Washington avenue, but at the east crossing, and a city ordinance was introduced requiring east-bound cars on Washington avenue to stop to allow passengers to alight at the east crossing of any street, and making it a misdemeanor for any motorman or conductor to violate the section. In the petition plaintiff alleged, among other things, that she signaled the men who were operating the car to stop "at the intersection of Twelfth street and Washington avenue, a regular stopping place for the discharge of passengers, for the purpose of alighting; and, by reason of said signal, defendant's servants and agents did stop said car at said streets and plaintiff did leave said car," and while she was in the act of leaving it, and before she had time to reach the pavement, the car was negligently started, etc.

The court refused two instructions requested by plaintiff of the following import: If the jury found from the evidence plaintiff signaled defendant's servants to stop on the west side or crossing of Twelfth street and Washington avenue for the purpose of allowing her to alight, and in response to said signal they did so, and while plaintiff was in the act of alighting, etc., the servants caused the car to start forward before she had a reasonable time to get off, and thereby threw her to the street and injured her, and the servants in charge of the car knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could or would have known before starting, and in time to have averted the injury to plaintiff, that plaintiff was attempting to alight therefrom, and if she was exercising ordinary care at the time, she was entitled to recover. The second of the refused instructions was like the one just epitomized, except that it omitted to require the jury to find the crew in charge of the car knew, or by ordinary care could or would have known before starting and in time to have averted the injury to plaintiff, that she was attempting to alight. This instruction, of which complaint is made, was given at defendant's request: That if the jury believed from the evidence the regular stopping place for the discharge of passengers from east-bound cars on Washington avenue was on the east side of Twelfth street, and there was no regular stopping place on the west side, it was the duty of plaintiff to wait until the car reached the east side of Twelfth street; and, if the jury found the injuries she sustained were caused by her falling from the car while attempting to alight while it was in motion and before it reached the east side of Twelfth street, she was not entitled to recover.

This appeal was argued on the assumption that the petition averred plaintiff signaled for the car to be stopped at the west side of the intersection of Twelfth street and Washington, "a regular stopping place for the discharge of passengers, and by reason of the signal the car was stopped at said place." On looking at the petition, we find it does not aver the signal was given for a stop on the west side, or that said side was the regular stopping place; but only avers plaintiff signaled the servants operating the car to stop at the intersection of Twelfth street and Washington avenue, "a regular stopping place for the discharge of passengers," and the car was stopped there. That averment did not commit plaintiff to the theory that the west side of Twelfth street was the regular stopping place for the discharge of east-bound passengers, and did not require her to prove it was. In this respect the petition was like the one in Cobb v. Railroad, 149 Mo. 135, 50 S. W. 310. Therefore the refusal of the two instructions requested by her and the giving of the one requested by defendant of which complaint is made cannot be justified on the ground the latter submitted the only case stated in the petition, and the former one not stated. But plaintiff testified the cars always stopped on the west side, and she always got off there; and this circumstance, in connection with the fact that one of the instructions given at her request required the jury to find she signaled for the car to stop "at the intersection of Twelfth street and Washington avenue, and in response to said signal said car did stop on the west side of Twelfth street to allow her to get off the car, and that said place was the regular stopping place for the discharge of passengers," etc., is said to preclude a recovery unless the jury found the west side of Twelfth street was a regular stopping place for the discharge of passengers. The argument at the hearing was that the west side was where passengers were always discharged; further, that she testified to ringing for a stop, and, if the usual stopping place was the east side, the car must have stopped there, instead of on the west side, or, if it stopped on the west side, the car crew had no reason to suppose she would attempt to get off there, and hence defendant is not answerable for the starting of the car while she was getting off unless they knew she was. This reasoning is fallacious. The gist of plaintiff's case was that the car was halted to let her alight in obedience to her signal, and was started carelessly while she was doing so. If these things were supported by evidence, she was entitled to have the jury pass on the weight of it, even though she was in error about cars always stopping on the west crossing. If said car stopped on said crossing in response to her signal, as she testified, the inference is fair that the operatives in charge knew, or should have known, somebody intended to get off, and should have been careful not to start until assured no person was in the act of alighting. Cobb v. Railroad, 149 Mo., loc. cit. 145, 50 S. W. 310; Jones v. Traction Co. (Mo. App.) 118 S. W. 675. The insertion in the first instruction given at her request of a requirement for the jury to find the west side was the regular stopping place, even if the language of the instruction fairly bears that interpretation, which is dubious, did not preclude her from having the case submitted to the jury in another instruction stating only facts essential to her recovery. An instruction requiring the jury to find one unnecessary fact was no obstacle to granting another which required them to find none but necessary facts. The first of the refused instructions requested by plaintiff should have been given; the second one was rightly refused, for it did not require the jury to find the car crew knew, or by even the highest care would have known, plaintiff was alighting in time to avoid hurting her. It should be said the first instruction as requested only bound defendant's servants to use ordinary care, which is below the legal requirement.

The order for new trial is affirmed, and the cause remanded. All concur.

Where, in an action for injuries in a crossing accident, seven or eight instructions were given advising the jury plaintiff could not recover if his negligence contributed to the accident, and presenting the issue in its various phases, such instructions sufficiently informed the jury on that issue to render harmless the refusal of a requested charge, even if sound, that if plaintiff sat back in the buggy just as the horses stepped on the track, and made no further effort to discover any approaching train, and if he had listened and looked long enough he could have seen the train and whipped up the horses and gotten over safely, he was guilty of contributory negligence.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Audrain County; Jas. D. Barnett, Judge.

Action by Walter Palmer, by next friend, against the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Brewster, Perren & Mayer for appellant. Brewster, Perren & Mayer for respondent.

GOODE, J. Plaintiff is a negro boy who sues by his next friend for a personal injury received in a collision of a locomotive of the defendant company with a buggy in which plaintiff was driving. The accident happened on the night of September 9, 1905, after midnight, and at a crossing which is near, but east of, the abandoned station of Larrabee. This plaintiff worked on a farm five or six miles northeast of Larrabee. One Saturday evening he and another negro boy drove from the farm where plaintiff lived to the town of Sturgeon, seven or eight miles southwest of Larrabee and about twelve miles southwest of where plaintiff lived. He visited his father and mother in Sturgeon, attended a social gathering at a church, and perhaps loitered about a saloon. He may have been intoxicated, but much of the evidence looks like he was not. He and his companion started for home about midnight in a buggy drawn by a team. Behind them were two white men, farmers in the vicinity, of the names of Devert and Palmer. A third negro boy accompanied the men in the buggy, riding a horse belonging to one of them. The occupants of the second vehicle had nothing to do with plaintiff and his companion; but the members of the two parties seem to have been acquainted, and to have passed a few words now and then when the buggies happened to come close enough to each other for conversation to occur. Plaintiff, Palmer, and his companion were in advance of the other buggy, and continued to be. They drove along about seven miles until they drew near Larrabee station, and near to the crossing of the road they were on and the railroad at a point some distance east of the station. The country about there is level, and the railroad track runs due east and west. The wagon road on which plaintiff was driving proceeds in a northeasterly direction until it is 150 yards south of the railroad crossing, and there branches; one fork leading to the north, and another, a wagon road, going eastwardly. At this point one of the men in the rear buggy, R. L. Palmer, got out and mounted his horse to travel east alone; his companion, Devert, intending to go on north in the buggy. The third negro boy, who had been riding the horse, relinquished the animal to its owner, Palmer, and got into the buggy with Devert. This white man, Palmer, should not be confused with the plaintiff. What is material about the incident at the fork of the road is that the white man, Palmer, testified he there heard a rumble, thought of the approach of a train, and warned Devert to look out for it as he (Devert) drove on toward the crossing. Palmer said he could not see the train. There was a hedge along the west side of that part of the country road extending to the right of way, and it is conceded this hedge would obstruct the view of a person driving northward until he entered the right of way; but the evidence tends to show the view was unobstructed by the hedge from thence to the track, a distance of 47 feet, and that, after getting on the right of way, no obstruction of vision intervened to the west of the crossing, except a wing fence 3 or 4 feet high and some cattle chutes 160 yards further west.

Plaintiff testified when he reached the right of way he rose to his feet, looked out of the buggy, still standing until the horses reached the track, drove the team in a walk to the track, when the engine struck the buggy, hurled it and plaintiff 100 feet or more up the track, and killed his companion. The horses were found hitched to the wagon pole further north on the wagon road. He testified that, though he was looking to the west, he neither saw nor heard the approaching train, and never knew what hit him. The neglect alleged was failure to sound crossing signals. The top of the buggy was up, and the curtains down. The night was wild and very dark. It was raining hard, and a strong wind was blowing from the north which drove the rain into the faces of the occupants of the buggy. The railroad track was two feet above the surrounding country. It was upgrade from the crossing toward Larrabee, and ordinarily a train coming from the west would be visible from the crossing for a long distance. When the witness Palmer heard the rumble of the train, he judged it was a half mile west, and another witness said that from observations he had made a train might be seen from the crossing clear to Clark, five miles away, and from the edge of the right of way would be visible to a person sitting in a buggy 1,275 feet away, or at the water tank. The train was a short one, consisting of an engine, tender, and caboose, and was running, the engineer said, at a speed of 35 miles an hour. He testified there was a lighted headlight on the front of the engine; but there was testimony tending to prove the contrary. The engineer said the night was so dark he could not see further than the front of his engine, did not see the buggy or team, hear the collision, or become aware he had struck anything until he found portions of the buggy on the front of the engine when he reached Mexico, 20 miles from the place of the accident. The evidence tended strongly to prove no bell was rung or whistle sounded as the engine approached the crossing, and it is conceded the finding of the jury for plaintiff settled this issue of fact. The company operating the road at the time of the accident was the Chicago & Alton Railway Company; but this action was instituted against the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, it being alleged the latter, on September 10, 1905, was the lessor of the Chicago & Alton Railway Company of the railroad track and right of way mentioned, and that on or about March 8, 1906, said two railroad companies were consolidated pursuant to the provisions and requirements of the laws of the state of Illinois, and all their capital stocks, corporate rights, franchises, immunities, and privileges of every kind passed by the consolidation and merger to the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, the defendant herein, which since said date is and has been the owner and possessor of all the railroad property and operating the same, and has become and is liable for the debts and liabilities of both the companies. There was evidence to prove those statements. The answer was a general denial and a plea of contributory negligence. The defendant requested the court to direct a verdict in its favor at the conclusion of the evidence, and, for the refusal of this and certain other rulings on requests for instructions, says the judgment in plaintiff's favor given pursuant to the verdict of the jury ought to be reversed.

1. A persuasive argument has been made against plaintiff's right to a verdict, on the theory that the evidence proves his own negligence contributed to the accident, which argument is to be considered in connection with plaintiff's right to the benefit of all inferences the jury properly might draw regarding the facts. Montgomery v. Railroad, 181 Mo. 504, 79 S. W. 930. If we accept plaintiff's testimony, he was perfectly careful as he approached the track, both in respect of looking and listening for a train; but counsel say his testimony must be disregarded because circumstances show it cannot be true, and that therefore the question is for the court. Sanguinette v. Railroad, 196 Mo. 466, 95 S. W. 386. It is said there were green lights on the sides of the engine and a coal oil headlight was burning, and plaintiff must have seen some of those lights as he approached the track, if he was standing up in the buggy and looking and listening for a train, as he swore; that the man Palmer heard the train when he got out of the buggy to mount his horse at the fork of the wagon road, and shouted a warning to Devert, thus proving it was possible to hear the train; and that plaintiff must have heard it, since he was nearer the track than said witness. If those facts were undisputably true and stood alone, they would be convincing against the truth of plaintiff's testimony; but they are to be weighed with other matters in proof. The witness Palmer testified to the best of his knowledge there was no headlight on the locomotive; that he saw none. Counsel for defendant account for this statement by saying the headlight was a coal oil lamp set back in a lantern, did not throw much light ahead, and was fireman opened the fire box of the engine to put in fuel. The degree of brilliancy of this glare, and whether or not it was thrown at a time when plaintiff could have seen it if he had been looking, are left indefinite. Neither is there testimony as to how brilliant the green lights were on the sides of the engine, or how far they could be seen through the thick weather of that night. It looks like plaintiff could only have seen the one on the south side as he drove northward, and considering the state of the weather, we cannot say as a matter of law he was bound to see this lamp, or, indeed, any of the alleged lights about the locomotive, had he been attentive. Moreover, the jury fairly might infer there was no headlight burning, and might find there was no glare from the fire box of a kind to warn plaintiff as he approached the track. We do not feel authorized to hold otherwise, in view of the engineer's statement that the illumination cast by the headlight failed to reveal to his gaze the buggy and team on the track. If this statement is true, the condition of the atmosphere prevented lamps from shining far. We are much impressed by the testimony of the engineer that he could not see ahead of the locomotive.

The witness Palmer said he heard the rumble of the train after he got out of the buggy, and had not heard it before. Devert, who remained in the buggy, did not hear it until Palmer spoke about it. A blast from the whistle or ring of the bell might have reached plaintiff when the rumble of the train would not. The noise of the wind and rain, and especially the patter of the rain on the top and sides of the buggy, would tend to drown the rumble. It is significant that neither the engineer or fireman in the cab, nor the conductor or a brakeman in the cupola of the caboose, saw or heard the collision. The reasoning against plaintiff's right to recover strikes us as inconclusive, and, on the whole, we think the question of his contributory negligence was for the jury. It is useless to discriminate the numerous cases dealing with similar contentions, as each case stands on its own facts, and we have found no precedent for denying redress as a court matter on such facts as are here.

2. Error is assigned on the refusal to instruct that it was the duty of plaintiff carefully to look and listen for an approaching train at the crossing; that this duty was positive and continuous until he had passed over the crossing in safety, and if the jury believed he sat back in the buggy just as the horses stepped on the track, and made no further effort to see or hear an approaching train, and believed if he had listened and looked long enough he could have seen the train, and could have whipped up the horses accident, and presenting the issue in its various phases, were given, and these sufficiently informed the jury on this issue to render the refusal of the instruction in question harmless, even if it was a sound charge. It was not sound, for it took for granted the duty was incumbent on plaintiff to whip his horses across the track upon the discovery of a train near him, if thereby he could have escaped, and that, if he failed to do so, he could be cut out of a verdict. The court had no right to tell the jury it was contributory negligence on plaintiff's part not to pursue that particular course, even though thereby he could have saved himself. The emergency of the peril may have been so imminent and terrifying as to excuse him for failing to adopt the very best expedient possible under the circumstances. Donahue v. Railroad, 91 Mo. 357, 2 S. W. 424, 3 S. W. 848; Kloiber v. Railroad, 107 Mo. 240, 17 S. W. 946, 14 L. R. A. 613.

3. At the date of the accident the railroad and the train of cars were operated by the Chicago & Alton Railway Company under a lease from the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company. Both were Illinois companies, and subsequently they consolidated under the name of the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, this defendant. The point is raised that defendant is not liable for the tort of the Chicago & Alton Railway Company, the former lessee, and did not become liable in consequence of the consolidation. The petition says the two original companies, the Chicago & Alton Railway Company and the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, united, merged, and consolidated on March 8, 1906, "under and in accordance with the requirements of the laws of the state of Illinois, * * * and the corporate name of the consolidated company is the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, the defendant herein." We think the words "under and in accordance with the laws of the state of Illinois" were intended by the pleader to designate the statutes of Illinois; and, indeed, the articles of consolidation introduced by plaintiff show, in the concluding clause of article 7, the consolidation was under a statute. But the averment regarding the requirements of the laws of Illinois was made to show authority for the consolidation, and not for the purpose of counting on a liability imposed on the consolidated company by those laws (statutes) for the torts of the constituent companies. This conclusion is enforced by an averment further down in the petition that the defendant became liable to be sued in this action "under the laws of the state of Missouri." Plaintiff did not allege a statute of Illinois which made defendant liable for the torts of one of the old companies, thereby making it incumbent on him to introduce such a statute in proof of his allegation and precluding him from recovering at common law as the petition stood. In the absence of proof of a controlling statute, the question must be disposed of according to common law and by the weight of authority in Illinois, and generally this makes the defendant liable. Chicago, etc., Railroad v. Ashling, 160 Ill. 373, 43 N. E. 373; Id., 56 Ill. App. 327. This is true whether the consolidated company was an entirely new corporation, or one of the old companies absorbed the other. The first clause of the articles of consolidation said the consolidation should be "effected by consolidating and merging all and singular the property and franchises of the party of the first part into the party of the second part," and the second clause said the name of the consolidated company should be the "Chicago & Alton Railroad Company." The old Chicago & Alton Railroad Company was the party of the first part in the articles, and the Chicago & Alton Railway Company was the party of the second part. Hence it looks like the consolidation was effected by merging the property and franchises of the old railroad company in the railway company and giving the latter the former's name. However, we consider this point immaterial, because, if the Chicago & Alton Railway Company remained in existence and absorbed the former Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, as the railway company was actually operating the line when plaintiff was hurt, it would, of course, be liable. If the consolidated company was a new corporation, it is liable for the torts of the constituent companies. Chicago, etc., R. R. v. Moffitt, 75 Ill. 524; Railroad v. Jones, 29 Ind. 465, 95 Am. Dec. 654; Columbus, etc., R. R. v. Powell, 40 Ind. 37; Cleveland, etc., R. R. v. Prewitt, 134 Ind. 557, 33 N. E. 367; Sappington v. Railroad, 37 Ark. 23; Berry v. Railroad, 52 Kan. 774, 36 Pac. 724, 39 Am. St. Rep. 381; 1 Elliott, Railroads, §§ 329, 334, and cases cited in notes; and see note to Atlantic, etc., R. R. v. Johnson, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1119, where the cases dealing with this question are collected.

Though we cannot know the fact judicially, a statute of Illinois provided the new company should be liable. Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. 1905, p. 510, § 65; Chicago, etc., Railroad v. Ashling, 160 Ill. 373, 43 N. E. 373. Though the seventh clause of the articles of consolidation does not cite the statute, it retains the liability of the consolidated company in the statutory language. Said clause of the articles reads: "As provided in the statute in such case made and provided, this consolidation shall not affect suits pending in which such consolidating corporations shall be parties, nor affect causes of action, nor the rights of persons, in any particular." Maybe that recital is sufficient proof of the statute. As to that we do not say, but hold defendant is answerable regardless of a statutory liability, and that the petition does not declare on the latter.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

LEWIS v. WABASH R. CO.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Oct. 19, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 258*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—PETITION.

Where a petition alleged that defendant's engineer in charge of an engine by which plaintiff was injured was incompetent, in the habit of violating the company's rules, and did not exercise ordinary care, as it knew or might have known, and that the injury resulted from the engineer suddenly starting the engine as plaintiff was about to board it in the performance of his duty, without ringing the bell or whistling in accordance with a custom, and that by reason thereof plaintiff was injured, it stated a cause of action for common-law negligence in the retention of an incompetent servant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 835; Dec. Dig. § 258.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 264*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—RAILROADS—OPERATION.

Where a petition stated a cause of action for injuries to a servant in the operation of a railroad engine, resulting from the negligence of the engineer, under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2873, 2874, 2875 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 1655–1657), repealing the fellow servant defense, it was not material that the petition also contained an unproved allegation alleging the hiring and keeping of negligent employés in order to state a cause of action at common law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 264.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 236*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—RAILROAD OPERATIVES.

Where it was customary not to move a railroad engine from under an archway without ringing the bell or blowing the whistle, a servant whose duty it was to keep the oil cans on the engines full, and who boarded the engine while under the archway for that purpose, was entitled to presume that it would remain stationary until he was warned by a bell or whistle that it was about to move.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 724; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 251*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ISSUES.

Where plaintiff alleged two grounds of recovery and was not permitted to recover on one of them, instructions, proceeding on the theory that such cause of action was the only one alleged, were properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 587–595; Dec. Dig. § 251.*]

5. WITNESSES (§ 321*)—EVIDENCE (§ 591*)—CREDIBILITY—TRUTH OF TESTIMONY.

A party calling a witness may vouch for his credibility and be precluded from impeaching it; but he does not vouch for the truth of his testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1094, 1099–1100; Dec. Dig. § 321;* Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2440; Dec. Dig. § 591.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 121*)—ARGUMENTS OF ATTORNEY.

Where a physician employed at defendant's railroad hospital, who had cared for plaintiff, was examined as plaintiff's witness, a statement made by plaintiff's attorney in argument that he would not reflect on the testimony of the physician, but would ask whether he was a willing witness and favorable to plaintiff, was a fair comment on the evidence.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 135*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—RULES—CUSTOM.

Where a settled custom not to move an engine from under an archway without ringing the bell or blowing the whistle had been followed with the sanction of defendant, it thereby acquired the efficacy of a rule which plaintiff was entitled to have observed, and the violation of which would constitute a tort to the same extent as if it had been printed and published.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 271; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

8. DAMAGES (§ 130*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EXCESSIVENESS.

Plaintiff's back and groin were injured, besides bruises on various parts of his body which made him sore and stiff, and which continued to the trial. He testified that his arm and shoulder still hurt him, that he had pains through the right chest to the top of the shoulder and collar bone, and that he suffered pains in his back and through the groin. He was in the hospital for several days, and since the accident had not been able to sleep on his right side or do heavy work. His earning capacity had been diminished, and he had lost time from work. Held, that a verdict for $1,000 was not excessive.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Audrain County; Jas. D. Barnett, Judge.

Action by R. J. Lewis against the Wabash Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This plaintiff was hurt while working as an employé of defendant in its yards at Moberly. In said yards were a turntable, a locomotive house, and a brick archway about 50 feet in length, through which engines were run to and from the turntable. The space between the parts of the wall of the archway and a locomotive when one was on the track in it was not wide enough for a man to pass. There were what the witnesses called brick "benches" jutting from the side of the wall, and a person would be caught between them and the engine. Paul Plowman was a hostler in the yards, and it was his duty to act as engineer in running locomotives back and forth through the archway. Sometimes a locomotive would stand for a while under the archway, and the usage was to give warning by whistling or ringing the bell of an intention to start it before starting, so any one in the archway or working about the engine might take precautions to prevent himself from being caught between the wall and the engine. Plaintiff's duty was to see that the oil cans on locomotives were kept full, and to do this it was necessary for him to climb on the engines. One evening while a locomotive was standing under the arch, and Plowman, the hostler or engineer, was in the cab, plaintiff approached the engine for the purpose of attending to the oil cans. The evidence goes to prove Plowman was aware of plaintiff's movements and purpose; but, just as plaintiff put his foot on the step of the engine to board it, Plowman, without whistling or ringing the bell, opened the throttle and started the engine forward suddenly, catching plaintiff between it and the wall or "benches" projecting therefrom, and rolling him along between them until the engine emerged from the archway, when he fell to the ground, after having been carried 30 feet or more. He reported the accident to the foreman, but remained in the yards two or three hours, when he felt so bad he had to go home, and the next day he entered defendant's hospital, where he remained under treatment for more than a month. The physician in charge of the institution said that when plaintiff entered he was suffering from a severe contusion of the right thorax, was unable to move his right shoulder, was treated for these injuries while in the hospital, and was discharged "in fairly good shape." Plaintiff's testimony was that he received other injuries, to wit, to the back and in the groin, besides bruises about various portions of his body which made him sore and stiff and had continued to the date of the trial. He testified his arm and shoulder still hurt him, that he still had pains through the right chest to the top of the shoulder and collar bone, had suffered from pains in his back and through the groin while he was in the hospital, and the third day he was there had coughed up blood, since the accident never had been able to sleep on his right side, could do no heavy work, his earning capacity had been diminished, and he had lost time from work. For defendant the testimony was that while the engine was moving plaintiff ran around the front of it and even with the cab, caught his overcoat on the air drum which projected two or three inches beyond the cab, and then passed to the rear and out of the archway. The petition alleged it was the usage in the yard to give warning by bell or whistle before starting an engine, but Plowman was an incompetent, negligent, and careless man, in the habit of violating the rules and regulations of the company, and had not been exercising ordinary care in the operation of engines, as defendant knew, or might have known. No proof of this averment was introduced, and the court instructed the jury it was unsustained by the evidence, which showed Plowman was competent to handle an engine. The petition alleged further that, as plaintiff was in the act of entering the engine in the discharge of his duty, the engineer, without whistling or ringing the bell, suddenly started the engine backward at a rapid speed, thereby preventing plaintiff from getting aboard, striking him, and throwing him against the wall and rolling him between the engine and wall for 30 feet, meanwhile striking, crushing, and squeezing him with different parts of the engine. Plaintiff's injuries, suffering, and losses are next averred, and then that they were "distinctly caused and produced by the negligence of the defendant aforesaid."

A peremptory instruction for a verdict in defendant's favor was refused, and the cause was submitted to the jury under instructions, as to some of which errors are assigned. The instructions, given and refused, besides the request for an order for a verdict, were, in substance, as follows: At the request of plaintiff, the court gave instruction No. 1, which was to the effect that if the jury believed at the time in question it was the plaintiff's duty to go on the engine in the yards and remove the oil cans therefrom and fill and replace them, and if the jury believed it was the "rule, practice, and custom of the defendant not to start or move any engine in said yards without giving a signal by the ringing of the bell or the blowing of the whistle," and if the jury further believed the plaintiff in the discharge of his duties attempted to mount this engine for the purpose of removing the oil cans therefrom, and while he was in the act of doing so the person in charge of it suddenly, negligently, and carelessly started it backward without giving any signal, without ringing the bell or sounding the whistle, and as the result thereof plaintiff was thrown against the brick wall and injured, they would find for the plaintiff. Plaintiff's second instruction was on the measure of damages, and told the jury, if they found for the plaintiff, they would take into consideration his health and condition before the injury complained of, as compared with his condition in consequence of the injury, the nature, extent, and character of the injury, if any, his bodily pain and mental anguish, his loss of time, together with all of the facts and circumstances of the case, and would assess his damages at such a sum as would be a fair and just compensation. On behalf of defendant the court gave four instructions. The first told the jury the plaintiff, to recover, must establish: First, that the engine stopped in the archway; second, while it was stopped, plaintiff attempted to get upon it; and, third, as plaintiff attempted to get upon it, the person in charge started it, without giving any signal, and so violently it threw plaintiff against the wall and injured him, or that he was struck by the engine and injured. The second instruction was to the effect that if the plaintiff could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered that the engine was about to start, or was starting, and could have released his hold and thereby prevented the injury, the jury should find for defendant. This instruction also advised the jury as to the meaning of ordinary care. The third instructed the jury plaintiff must establish that the said Paul Plowman in charge of the engine was negligent, and such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, and there was no evidence Paul Plowman was incompetent and an improper man to handle an engine. Defendant's fourth instruction was to the effect that if the jury believed plaintiff attempted to pass between the engine and the wall, and was injured thereby, he could not recover. The court refused three instructions offered by defendant. The first was to the effect that when a party calls a witness he vouches for the credibility of such witness and the truth of his statements; the second, that if the jury believed the hostler in charge of the engine in question was a competent workman for the work for which he was engaged at the time of his employment, and was a competent workman at the time of the accident, plaintiff could not recover; the third told the jury, unless they found the principal or vice principal of the defendant charged with the duty of hiring the hostler in charge of the engine in question at the time of the accident failed to exercise ordinary care in selecting said hostler, although they might find said hostler was incompetent, they would return a verdict for defendant, and the burden was on the plaintiff to prove ordinary care was not used in the selection of the hostler.

The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $1,000, and in due time defendant filed a motion for new trial and a motion in arrest of judgment, which motions were overruled, and defendant appealed.

J. L. Minnis and Robertson & Robertson, for appellant. P. H. Cullen and Rolla McIntire, for respondent.

GOODE, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. Defendant's counsel objected to the reception of testimony, saying the petition stated no cause of action, and this was the only attack on that pleading prior to verdict, except by two irrelevant motions. It is argued the petition counts only on common-law negligence in the retention of an incompetent servant; but, if it does, it states a cause of action, and the objection was rightly overruled.

2. As the averment of retention of a careless engineer was not made good by proof, a nonsuit was claimed on the theory that the aid of the statutes was not invoked, and there was a failure to prove the petition in its entire scope and meaning. Perhaps the pleader thought plaintiff was not engaged in operating work in the meaning of section 2873, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1655), which takes away the fellow-servant defense when a railroad employé is injured while thus engaged by the negligence of another employé, and thought, too, plaintiff and the engineer would be fellow servants within the definitions contained in sections 2874 and 2875 of the statutes, and, so thinking, inserted an averment in the petition which would state a case at common law. In an action on the statutes, such an averment is not indispensable, but if made does not prevent the petition from stating a case, and, if other essential facts are alleged and proved, it is no matter that the charge of hiring or keeping careless hands remains unproved. The question then is whether this petition states a good case without the unproved allegation; one good in view of the statute which excludes the defense that plaintiff's injury was due to the carelessness of a fellow servant. We have no doubt it does. It should be remarked just here that the question has not been raised whether plaintiff's status as an employé was such as to entitle him to maintain an action under the statute; the contention being he has pleaded no action of that kind. Allegations of a usage to give signals before starting an engine, as a warning to employés who might be endangered by its movement, and that the engine which hurt plaintiff was started without giving a signal, in violation of the usage, and while plaintiff was in the act of boarding it, sufficed to state a case.

3. The instructions given and refused have been digested in the statement, and it is apparent from them the case was fairly submitted. If the evidence for plaintiff was true, his hurts were due to gross neglect on the part of the engineer, and plaintiff was not at all in fault, for at the time he was attending to his work in the usual way, and had the right to expect the locomotive to stand still until he was warned by bell or whistle it was about to move. The second and third of the refused instructions proceeded on the notion that the petition counted exclusively on negligence in retaining the engineer when he was known, or might have been known, to be incompetent; but, as we have seen, that was only one of the alleged acts of negligence and on which no recovery was permitted, and plaintiff was entitled to have the jury pass on the other allegation.

A party calling a witness may vouch for his credibility and be precluded from impeaching it; but he does not absolutely vouch for the truth of his testimony, and no party is concluded by the statements of any one witness in a case, but is entitled to have the jury weigh it in connection with all the evidence adduced. Helling v. Order of Honor, 29 Mo. App. 309; King v. Insurance Co., 101 Mo. App. 163, 76 S. W. 55. Hence the first of the three refused instructions was unsound. It related to the testimony of the surgeon of defendant's hospital, who was put on the stand by plaintiff, and we overrule the assignment of error in refusing the request; also, overrule the exception to the remark of plaintiff's counsel in his address to the jury, wherein he said he would not reflect on the testimony of the physician, but would ask whether he was a willing and talkative witness and favorable to the plaintiff. That was a fair comment on the evidence.

An objection to the first instruction granted for plaintiff and, indeed, to his right to have the case submitted to the jury at all, is that he failed to prove any "rule, practice, and custom," as alleged, to give warning of the starting of engines in the yards. The idea is that at most a usage or custom was proved, but no written and promulgated rule. All the evidence, including the testimony of the foreman of the yards, was that it had been customary to whistle or ring the bell before starting a locomotive into motion; but it was not proved the company had adopted a formal rule. The purpose of a rule, if prescribed, would have been to regulate the manner of moving engines for the safety of employés, and, if a settled custom or usage had been followed with the sanction of the company, this was in effect a rule which plaintiff was entitled to have observed for his protection, and the violation of it was as much a tort as if it had been printed and published. Rutledge v. Railroad, 123 Mo. 121, 134, 24 S. W. 1053, 27 S. W. 327; 1 Labatt, Master & Servant, § 213a.

4. We have examined some points made regarding the improper admission of evidence, but do not deem them well taken.

5. Finally, it is insisted the verdict was excessive. Study of the testimony regarding the sufferings of plaintiff, the length of time he was disabled, and the reduction of his earning capacity by half, has convinced us this position is untenable.

The verdict was reasonable, and the judgment will be affirmed. All concur.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Oct. 1909.)

1. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SUPPORT IN EVIDENCE.

In an action for personal injuries from a collision between plaintiff's wagon and a street car, an instruction that if the jury find for plaintiff it should assess his damages at a sum which will be fair compensation for expenses incurred in employing others to assist him in his business, and for medicines and medical attention, etc., was error; there being no evidence of expense incurred in the employment of others to assist him in his business, nor of the amount paid for medicine or medical supplies, nor of loss of business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 596-612; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action for injuries by collision with a street car, a count based upon the vigilant watch ordinance had been abandoned, the giving of an instruction based upon the ordinance was prejudicial error, though the ordinance is merely declaratory of the common law.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 627*)—DISMISSAL—DELAY IN FILING ABSTRACT.

Where respondent had not asked that an appeal be continued or reset, but had filed brief and argument, and argued the case orally when reached, a meritorious appeal will not be dismissed on motion, because of appellant's failure to file the abstract with the clerk of this court at least 30 days before the cause was set for argument, as required by rule 15 (112 S. W. vi); the penalty under rule 23 being discretionary with the court.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Daniel G. Taylor, Judge.

Action by Thomas Jefferson Reynolds against the United Railways Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

The petition filed contained two counts; the first count founded on what is known as the "vigilant watch" ordinance of the city of St. Louis, and the second on common-law negligence. The cause of action is based on a collision between plaintiff's wagon and an on-coming car of defendant. At the time of the accident plaintiff was driving along the tracks of defendant's road, and, at a point where an excavation in the street alongside of the tracks rendered it impracticable to use the street, his wagon was overtaken and run into by a car operated by defendant company, plaintiff thrown off and hurt, and his horses so injured that one of them died; the load in the wagon also being damaged. The evidence tended to show that the value of the horse which died as the result of the injuries was $225; the damage to the other horse, $200; the wagon which was demolished was valued at $175, and would cost $225 to replace it with a new one; that plaintiff's clothes were damaged in the amount of $10; he was idle four weeks or more on account of his injuries, which consisted of a scalp wound, cuts and bruises on his face, head, and shoulder; his back was wrenched, his hip and knee injured, followed by general physical weakness, pains, and trouble in his head and body. At the close of the evidence plaintiff dismissed as to the first count and went to the jury on the second.

Among the instructions given at the instance of plaintiff are two, numbered 2 and 3, and as follows: "(2) The court instructs the jury that, by the terms of the ordinance read in evidence, the defendant's motorman in charge of the car that collided with the vehicle of which plaintiff was an occupant (if you find that the said car did so collide with said vehicle) was bound to keep a vigilant watch for persons on foot and vehicles, either upon defendant's track or moving towards it, and on the first appearance of danger to such person or vehicle the person or persons in charge of said car were bound to use ordinary care to stop said car in the shortest time and space possible under the circumstances, by reasonable use of the means at his command, and a failure to keep such vigilant watch and to so stop said car upon the first appearance of danger (if defendant's said servant did so fail) was negligence upon the part of the defendant, and if you find that such negligence caused said injury to plaintiff's person and damage to his property, and if the plaintiff in said vehicle was exercising ordinary care at the time of and before said injury in averting injury from collision with said car, then plaintiff is entitled to recover. (3) If the jury find for the plaintiff it should assess his damages at such sum as it believes from the evidence will be a fair compensation to him: First, for any pain of body or mind that the plaintiff has suffered, caused directly by his injuries; second, for any expenses necessarily incurred by plaintiff in employing others to assist him in his business, caused directly by his injuries; third, for any expenses necessarily incurred by plaintiff for medicines and medical attention, directly caused by his injuries; fourth, for any loss which the plaintiff sustained to his wagon, team, or clothes, caused directly by defendant's negligence—all of which damages taken together should not exceed the sum of $3,260."

There was a verdict of $1,800 in favor of plaintiff, followed by a judgment for that amount. After an unsuccessful motion for a new trial and duly saving exceptions, defendant appeals.

Boyle & Priest, for appellant. Fred. A. Mayhall, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). We are compelled to reverse the judgment in this case. The instruction as to the measure of damages is erroneous. There was no evidence of any expense incurred or paid out by plaintiff in the employment of others to assist him in his business while suffering from his injuries. There is no evidence of amount paid for medicines or medical attention. There is no evidence of damage by loss of business.

The second instruction, in so far as founded on the "vigilant watch" ordinance, should not have been given. The count sounding on that was abandoned. The ordinance is not mentioned in the count on which the case went to the jury. While our courts have held that this ordinance is merely declaratory of the common law, this ruling has always been made in cases in which the ordinance was pleaded. In this second instruction the ordinance is distinctly embodied. Sepetowski v. Railroad Co., 102 Mo. App. 110, 76 S. W. 693, was a case before a justice of the peace, where no pleadings are required. In all the cases from Rapp v. Transit Co., 190 Mo. 144, 88 S. W. 865, to White v. Railroad Co., 202 Mo. 539, 101 S. W. 14, the ordinance was pleaded in the count on which the case went to the jury. The ordinance given in evidence in this case was before the jury. They were instructed under it, and yet the count sounding on it had been abandoned. We think this was error to the prejudice of the defendant.

Counsel for respondent move to dismiss the appeal for failure to file the abstract with the clerk of this court at least 30 days before the cause was here set for argument, and he invokes rule 12 of our court. Rule 12, as amended July 20, 1909, does not take effect until January 1, 1910. See 135 Mo. App. vii, 121 S. W. xx. Rule 23 of our former rules is in force as to all cases on the October, November, and December, 1909, docket. This case was on the October, 1909, docket. Under rule 23 of the rules governing this case (see 134 Mo. App. x, 112 S. W. viii), failure to comply with rule 15 is penalized at discretion of the court, by dismissal or continuance and resetting of the cause. We decline to dismiss the appeal, as we consider it meritorious, and we hardly suppose counsel for respondent desires that it be continued or reset. At least he has not asked that and has not only filed full brief and elaborate and careful argument, but argued the case orally when it was reached on the docket.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is overruled, and the judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and the cause remanded. All concur.

SLEZAK v. ST. LOUIS TRANSIT CO.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Oct. 19, 1909.)

1. STREET RAILROADS (§ 114*)—INJURIES TO PERSONS ON TRACK—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in an action for injury to a driver of a steam roller in being thrown therefrom by a street car colliding with it held to support a finding that the motorman could by ordinary care have avoided the collision after the danger became apparent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 971*)—DISCRETION OF LOWER COURT—OPINION EVIDENCE—QUALIFICATION OF WITNESS.

Witness testified that he had timed a street car but once, but that he was familiar with the running of cars, had frequently observed them, and that his estimate of the speed of the car in question was based on his observations. Held, that to allow him to give his estimate was not such an abuse of the court's discretion as warranted interference by the Court of Appeals.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3852; Dec. Dig. § 971.*]

3. DAMAGES (§ 132*)—EXCESSIVE—PERSONAL INJURIES.

Plaintiff, while driving a steam roller, was thrown therefrom by a street car colliding with it. He testified that prior to his injury he was in good health; that he had operated a steam roller about eight months in a season; that he received from $3.50 to $4 a day; that since his injury he was disabled in his limbs; that he had tried to work, but, owing to his disabilities, had been unable to do anything except light work and for short periods; that he had lost wages for nearly two years; that he continued to suffer pain. A physician who treated him testified that he would never fully recover, and another physician that his injuries were permanent. He incurred a doctor's bill of $50 to $75, and a bill of $100 for medicine. Held, that a verdict of $2,000 was not excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 372–385; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

4. STREET RAILROADS (§ 118*)—INJURIES TO PERSONS ON TRACK—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for injury to a steam roller driver thrown therefrom by collision with a street car, the court charged that if the motorman failed to keep a vigilant watch for vehicles on the track, or to exercise ordinary care to control or stop the car and avoid the collision, and plaintiff was exercising ordinary care, then he was entitled to recover. In another instruction ordinary care was defined to mean such care as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under similar circumstances. Held, that there was no error in the use of the words "vigilant watch," taking the instruction in its entirety, and particularly when considered in connection with the instruction defining ordinary care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 258–269; Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

5. STREET RAILROADS (§ 118*)—INJURIES TO PERSONS ON TRACK—INSTRUCTIONS.

A requested charge that there was no evidence that the motorman was running the car, which collided with plaintiff's steam roller, at a high and reckless speed, and that that charge of negligence was withdrawn from the jury's consideration, was defective, and would have been confusing, in that it failed to define what would have been a high and reckless speed under the circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 258–269; Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 140*)—QUESTIONS OF LAW OR FACT—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

It is for the jury to determine what weight to attach to the testimony of witnesses.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Daniel G. Taylor, Judge.

Action by Frank Slezak against the St. Louis Transit Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Action for personal injuries resulting from a collision between a street car, operated by the defendant St. Louis Transit Company, and a steam roller, driven by plaintiff, as engineer. The petition charges common-law and ordinance negligence, and avers that on July 6, 1904, while plaintiff, then in the employ of the city of St. Louis and operating a steam roller on Twenty-Second and Morgan streets, was crossing defendant's track to the south, "defendant's servants in charge of their east-bound car on Morgan street carelessly and without using any care to control or stop said car and prevent it colliding with said steam roller, and whilst running said car at a high and reckless speed, and in disregard of warnings to stop said car, caused and suffered said car to collide with said steam roller, whereby plaintiff was thrown from said roller and caused to fall and sustain permanent injury upon his right shoulder and the muscles and tendons thereof, and also upon his right leg and the muscles and tendons thereof, and also to injure his hearing, and to bruise and lacerate his head and face." The petition also pleads what is known as the "vigilant watch" ordinance, requiring that the motormen on street cars should keep a vigilant watch for vehicles on the track or moving towards it, and that, upon the first appearance of danger to such vehicle, the car should be stopped within the shortest time and space practicable under the circumstances. It is then charged that defendant's servants at the time of the collision failed to keep such vigilant watch and failed to so stop said car, which violation of the ordinance, it is charged, directly contributed to cause plaintiff's injury. The petition further avers that by his injuries so sustained plaintiff has suffered and will suffer great pain of body and mind, has been disabled from labor, has lost and will lose the earnings of his labor, has incurred and will incur large expenses for medical and surgical attention and nursing, all to his damage in the sum of $4,499, for which sum he prays judgment. The answer is a general denial, accompanied by the averment that the plaintiff's injuries, if any sustained, were caused by his own carelessness and negligence in attempting to drive a steam roller across the track immediately in front of a moving car. The reply was a general denial. The suit was originally against the St. Louis Transit Company & United Railways Company, but on motion of plaintiff an order was entered dismissing the suit against the United Railways Company.

On a trial before the court and jury evidence was introduced tending to show the following facts: The plaintiff and other employés of the city had been engaged with the steam roller in question on the day mentioned, rolling macadam in the block north of Morgan street, between Morgan street and Franklin avenue. Having completed the work in that block, the roller, with its attending workmen, was proceeding south on Twenty-Second street to roll the macadam in the block between Morgan street and Lucas avenue. It was a bright, clear, day, and the time between 2 to 2:30 p. m. Morgan street at that time was occupied by the defendant with a single track, located about the center of the street, on which track defendant operated its street cars for the carriage of passengers east-bound on said street. It was downgrade, defendant's tracks approaching Twenty-Second street from the west, as far as two or three blocks west from Twenty-Second street. When the steam roller in charge of plaintiff, on its way south, reached Morgan street, the watchman or flagman for the city who attended the roller, and whose duty it was to watch at street crossing and see whether the way was clear for the passage of the roller over the crossing, signaled plaintiff to stop the roller to allow one of defendant's cars going east to pass. Plaintiff did stop the roller in obedience to the signal, and allowed the car to pass east. There is much discrepancy in the evidence as to the distance from the track the stop was made. Witnesses for the plaintiff located the stop at about 10 to 15 feet from the track, while the evidence for the defendant located the stop at from four to six feet from the track. After this car going east had passed the roller, the watchman, one Brady, went forward, and signaled plaintiff to move on south across the car track. Brady testified that, before doing so, he looked west, and that there was no car approaching from the west in sight; that, when he looked again, which was as the wheels of the roller were going on the track, he saw a car coming east, and that it was then in the middle of the block between Twenty-Second and Twenty-Third streets, about 200 feet away; that he immediately waived a signal for the car to stop; that the car did not stop, but ran down at a high speed, and struck the wheel of the roller and knocked it off the track, with the rear end of the roller about 18 feet from the point of collision.

The roller weighed about 17 tons. It was constructed with two wheels in the rear about 8 feet high and with a small guide-wheel in front. The machine was of iron, and about 16 feet long with rollers in front. It was reversible, and could be moved with either end in front. On the day of the accident the roller was moving south along Twenty-Second street to Morgan street, with the rear of the machine south and in front. After the signal was given to go ahead with the roller—that is, after the first car passed—the machine moved to and on to the track, with the end of the machine to which were fixed large wheels in front. The machine while moving to and on to the track moved very slowly, "about half the speed of a slow walk of a man." There was evidence for plaintiff tending to show that the rear wheels going south got on the track and about to the south rail. The plaintiff and his witnesses testify that, when the wheels of the roller were on the track and the street car then in the middle of the block, say 150 or 200 feet away, Brady, the watchman, waved his flag to stop the car, and the plaintiff and a workman on the roller both waved their hats and hands at the motorman to stop. He did not stop, but ran the car down and collided with the roller knocking the roller to one side as before mentioned. As a result of the collision, the plaintiff was thrown from his place on the roller to near the southeast corner of the street, and sustained the injuries complained of.

There was evidence that the car was running at a speed of 25 miles an hour. The motorman, however, called as a witness by plaintiff, testified that the car was running 8 to 10 miles an hour. He also testified that he could stop the car in 50 or 60 feet under the circumstances, and that the car was equipped with air brakes, which were in good order. He further testified that he did not try to stop the car until it was within 40 feet of the roller, testifying that it was not until then that he realized there was danger of the collision; that he began to give an alarm by loud ringing of the gong when the car was midway of the block, or about 150 to 200 feet away from the roller. There was a conflict of evidence over the question of the extent of the injuries and damages sustained.

The evidence for the plaintiff, given by himself was: That prior to the injury he was a sound man in good health and strength. That he was a stationary engineer. Had been employed as such by the city of St. Louis to operate a steam roller for two seasons, running about eight months each; the one when injured being his third season. That his wages were from $3.50 to $4 per day. That since his injury he is disabled in his limbs. That he had tried to work, but, owing to his disabilities, has been unable to work except light work and for short periods. That since his injury, July 6, 1904, to the date of the trial, April 27, 1908, he had been able to work, all told, as much as one year. That as a result of his injuries to his leg he had to have four operations, cutting out the putrid matter that had formed in the wound. That his shoulder was so injured he could not lift any weight, and he cannot stand on his leg any length of time because it hurts him all the time. He continues to suffer pain. The hearing of one ear is impaired and almost lost. A physician who treated him for six weeks testified that plaintiff will never fully recover from his injuries, and that they are permanent. Another physician testified that the injuries are permanent. Plaintiff had incurred a doctor's bill of $50 to $75, and had paid out for medicines $100.

The court at the instance of plaintiff gave three instructions as follows:

"(1) If the jury find from the evidence in this case that on the 6th day of July, 1904, the defendant was using and operating the railway and car mentioned in the evidence for the purpose of transporting persons for hire from one point to another in the city of St. Louis as a street railway company; and if the jury find from the evidence that Twenty-Second street and Morgan street at the places mentioned in the evidence were open public streets within the city of St. Louis at said time; and if the jury find from the evidence that on said day the plaintiff was in the service of the city of St. Louis as engineer of the steam roller mentioned in the evidence, and if the jury find from the evidence that the plaintiff on said day was operating said steam roller going across Morgan street on Twenty-Second street at the crossing of said streets, and whilst doing so defendant's east-bound car, mentioned in the evidence, collided with said steam roller and injured the plaintiff on his shoulder, leg, head, and face as mentioned in the evidence; and if the jury find from the evidence that defendant's motorman in charge of said car failed to keep a vigilant watch for vehicles on said track, or failed to exercise ordinary care to control or stop said car and avoid causing said car to collide with said steam roller, and that thereby said car was caused to collide with said steam roller and injure the plaintiff as mentioned in the evidence; and if the jury find from the evidence that the plaintiff was exercising ordinary care to look and listen for said car and avoid injury therefrom—then plaintiff is entitled to recover, and the verdict should be for the plaintiff.

"(2) If the jury find for the plaintiff they should assess his damages at such a sum as they believe from the evidence will be a fair compensation to him: First. For any pain of body or mind which the jury believe from the evidence he has suffered or will hereafter suffer by reason of said injuries and directly caused thereby. Second. For any loss of the earnings of his labor which the jury believe from the evidence he has sustained, or will hereafter sustain, by reason of said injuries and directly caused thereby. Third. For any expenses necessarily incurred for medicines, medical, or surgical attention to the reasonable value thereof, which the jury believe from the evidence the plaintiff has incurred by reason of said injuries, and directly caused thereby.

"(3) The court instructs the jury that by the words 'ordinary care' as used in the instructions is meant such care as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the same or similar circumstances."

At the instance of the defendant the court gave five instructions as follows:

"(1) Even though the jury believe from the evidence in this case that the motorman in charge of the car failed to keep a vigilant watch, and failed to stop the car in the shortest time and space possible after the roller was started towards the track into danger, and that said car was being run at a negligent rate of speed, yet, if you further believe from the evidence that the plaintiff ran the roller into danger of collision with said car when said car was so dangerously near as to render a collision unavoidable by the motorman while in the exercise of ordinary care in watching for the roller and in running and stopping said car, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and your verdict will be for the defendant.

"(2) The court instructs the jury that if you believe from the evidence in this case that the collision and injuries complained of were the direct result of the mutual and concurring negligence of the plaintiff and the motorman in charge of the car, and that if it had not been for the joint negligence of plaintiff and the motorman, if you so find, the collision and injuries would not have occurred, then the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and your verdict will be for the defendant.

"(3) The court instructs the jury that the law casts the burden upon the plaintiff to establish his case by a preponderance of the evidence, and the jury will return a verdict for defendant if the evidence is clearly balanced, or if it preponderates for defendant. While the preponderance of the evidence does not consist wholly in the greater number of witnesses testifying the one way or the other, yet the number of credible and disinterested witnesses testifying on the one side or the other of a disputed point in this case is a proper element for the jury to consider in determining where lies the preponderance of the evidence.

"(4) The court instructs the jury that you are the sole judges of the weight and credibility of the evidence in this case. It is for you to determine on which side of the case the evidence preponderates, and in fixing and determining the weight and credibility to be given the testimony of the several witnesses who have testified before you and all the evidence as a whole you should look to the manner and demeanor of the witnesses while testifying, to their willingness or unwillingness to answer upon the one side or the other, if any, to their intelligence or the want of intelligence, to whether or not any witness is interested in the case, to his feelings of prejudice or bias towards either party, if any, to his knowledge of and opportunities for knowing the facts to which he testifies, to the probability or improbability of the facts to which he testifies, to whether or not he has made contradictory statements either in court or out of court concerning the material facts involved in this case; and, after considering all these things, you should then fix and determine the weight and credibility to be given to the evidence of each and every witness testifying in the case and the evidence as a whole. In this connection you are further instructed that, if you believe that any witness in this cause has willfully sworn falsely to any material fact or facts in issue, then you are at liberty to disregard all or any portion of the testimony of such witness.

"(5) The court instructs the jury that if you believe from the evidence in this case that plaintiff drove the steam roller onto defendant's track in such close proximity to the moving car as to render it impossible for the motorman, while in the exercise of ordinary care, to stop the car and avoid the collision and injury to plaintiff, then the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and your verdict must be for the defendant."

The defendant also asked for an instruction for nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's case and again at the close of the case, which the court refused to give. The court also refused six other instructions asked by defendant which are not necessary to be set out as the refusal to give defendant's instruction No. 3 and the instructions for nonsuit are the only ones on which assignment of error is made in the brief filed. Defendant's refused instruction No. 3 is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that there is no evidence in this case that the defendant's motorman was running the car at a high and reckless speed, and that charge of negligence in the petition is withdrawn from your consideration." In the statement and brief of the appellant error is also assigned to the giving of plaintiff's instructions Nos. 1 and 3. There was a verdict for plaintiff for $2,000, and, after an unsuccessful motion for new trial, the case is brought here by appeal, exception having been duly saved to the action of the court in the admission and exclusion of testimony, to the giving and refusing of instructions, and in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Boyle & Priest, for appellant. A. R. & Howard Taylor, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). We have read the evidence as abstracted by defendant's counsel in connection with the assignments of error relied on. These assigned errors are (1) that there is no evidence in the record that the motorman could by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided the collision after the danger became apparent; (2) that there is no certain testimony of persons qualified to speak as to the rate of speed of the car; (3) that the verdict is the result of passion and prejudice; (4) that it was reversible error to have permitted, over objection, a witness, who was neither qualified either by training or by observation so to do, to give his opinion on the speed of the car; (5) that plaintiff's first instruction was erroneous, and, finally, that the court erred in refusing defendant's third instruction, because the charge that the car was being run at a reckless rate of speed was untrue, and should, therefore, have been withdrawn from the jury.

As to the first point made, that there is no evidence in the record that the motorman could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have avoided the collision, after the danger became apparent, it is sufficient to say that there was evidence tending to support such a finding, and that this assignment is not well taken.

Nor is the proposition that there is no certain testimony of persons qualified to speak as to the rate of speed of the car sustained by the record. While it is true that only one of the witnesses, Brady, testified to having previously timed cars running in the city, and that that witness testified that he had only done so on one occasion, his testimony, as well as that of the other witnesses, was to the effect that they were familiar with the running of cars in the city of St. Louis, and had frequently observed them, and they testified that their estimate of speed was based on their observations. The action of the trial court in allowing the witness Brady to testify as to his estimate of the speed of the car was within the sound discretion of the court on the evidence which was brought out as to Brady's qualification, and is not such an abuse of the discretion of the court as warrants interference by this court with that action. The action of the court in admitting this testimony in no manner is in conflict with the ruling on that matter made in Stotler v. Railroad, 200 Mo. 107, 98 S. W. 509. On the contrary, we think it was in line and in entire harmony with the law as there laid down.

We cannot say in reviewing the testimony in the case, and considering the nature of the injuries to plaintiff and their extent and duration, that the verdict is the result of passion or prejudice. There is testimony to the effect that he had lost wages for nearly two years, and that his daily wage before the accident was $3.50. He was put to expense, and he is entitled, over and above these items, to compensation for his sufferings as well as for the impairment of his earning capacity. In the light of this evidence, we cannot declare that this verdict is either excessive, or that it shows evidence of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury. The second instruction given at the instance of plaintiff correctly directed the jury as to the measure of damages, and in our opinion the verdict is warranted by the testimony and responsive to that instruction.

Error is assigned to the giving of the first instruction at the instance of plaintiff. The particular error assigned to this instruction is the use of the expression to the effect that, if the jury found that the motorman failed "to keep a vigilant watch" for vehicles on the track, etc., plaintiff can recover. The contention is that the instruction should merely have required the motorman to exercise ordinary care in looking and watching for plaintiff. As we understand the decision of the Supreme Court in Schmidt v. St. Louis R. R. Co., 149 Mo. 269, 50 S. W. 921, 73 Am. St. Rep. 380, there was no error in the use of the words, "vigilant watch," in this instruction, when taking the instruction in full, particularly so when considered in connection with the instruction as to ordinary care, as defined in plaintiff's third instruction.

Nor can we agree with the fifth proposition of the defendant, that it was error to refuse the defendant's third instruction. There was evidence in the case as to the speed at which the car was running and much conflict of evidence as to that, but it cannot be said that the charge of a reckless rate of speed was either unproved or had been abandoned by the plaintiff. Furthermore, this third instruction, as asked, was defective, and would have been confusing, in that it failed to define to the jury what would have been considered a high and reckless rate of speed under the circumstances of the case.

On a review of all the evidence in the case and the instructions given, we find no error that warrants us in saying that the case should be reversed. Counsel for appellant vigorously and earnestly assail the credibility of the witnesses produced by plaintiff. In the fourth instruction given at the instance of defendant the jury was fully and carefully instructed as to the credibility of the witnesses. That question was accurately placed before the jury. The witnesses were before the jury. The jury heard and saw them, and with this cautionary instruction it was for the jury to determine what weight to attach to their testimony.

On consideration of the whole case we fail to discover in it any reversible error, and the judgment of the trial court is affirmed. All concur.

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 116*)—REGULATIONS — MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS IN DRAMSHOP—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION—"MUSICAL INSTRUMENT"—"PERFORMING UPON"—"HAVING" THE SAME PERFORMED ON.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3018 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1729), forbids a dramshop keeper to keep, exhibit, or use, or suffer to be kept, exhibited, or used in his dramshop, a piano, organ, or other musical instrument whatever, "for the purpose of performing upon or having the same performed upon in such dramshop." Held that while a Regina Concerto, which is a musical machine set playing by dropping a coin in a slot, and thereby releasing the spring setting the machinery in motion, is a musical instrument, and winding it up and dropping a coin in the slot constitutes performing on it, it is not such a musical instrument as the Legislature meant to designate in the statute, which meant the keeping of an instrument with the intention of the dramshop keeper to perform on it himself or engaging some one else to do so; the word "having" in the phrase "having the same performed on" not being synonymous with "permitting," but importing making an arrangement to have an act done.

Action by the Thiebes-Stierlin Music Company against Joe Weiss. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Stewart, Elliott, Chapline & Blaney, for appellant. Charles H. Brock, for respondent.

GOODE, J. On February 23, 1905, plaintiff, a corporation, sold to defendant an instrument or machine known as the Regina Concerto. The purchase price was $750, of which defendant paid $250 in cash and gave his note for $500, payable in installments thereafter, which note he secured by a chattel mortgage on the instrument. He afterwards defaulted in paying the installments of his note, and the present action in replevin was instituted to recover possession of the instrument under the terms of the chattel mortgage. The cause was submitted to the court on stipulated facts, and we will cull from the stipulation such facts as we deem material to the decision. The defense to the action rests on the notion that the chattel mortgage executed by defendant to plaintiff was void and gave no security because the instrument was purchased by defendant to be used in violation of section 3018 of the statutes (Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1729]) of which unlawful purpose plaintiff had knowledge when the sale was made and the mortgage executed. Instead of quoting the section as printed in the statutes, we will copy the original act (Laws 1889, p. 104) including the title:

"An act to prevent any dramshop keeper from keeping or permitting to be kept in or about his dramshop certain musical instruments, any billiard, pool or other gaming table, bowling or ten-pin alley, cards, dice, or other device for gaming or amusement.

"Section 1. Dramshops not to keep gaming tables, etc.—penalty.

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Missouri, as follows:

"[Section 1.] A dramshop keeper shall not keep, exhibit, use or suffer to be kept, exhibited or used, in his dramshop any piano, organ or other musical instrument whatever, for the purpose of performing upon or having the same performed upon in such dramshop, nor shall he permit any sparring, boxing, wrestling or other exhibition or contest or cock fight in his dramshop; and it shall be unlawful for any dramshop keeper to set up, keep, use or permit to be kept or used in or about the premises of his dramshop by any other person, or run or to be run in connection with such dramshop, in any manner or form whatever, any billiard table, pool table or other gaming table, bowling or ten-pin alley, cards, dice or other device for gaming or playing any game of chance; and the keeper of such dramshop shall not permit any person in or about his dramshop to play upon any such table or alley, or with cards, dice or any gaming device of any kind. Every person violating the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars, and in addition to such fine, shall forfeit his license to keep a dramshop for the term of two years next thereafter.

"Approved June 17, 1889."

Plaintiff admits knowing the appliance was purchased to be used in a saloon defendant kept in the city of St. Louis, but contends the statute, when properly construed in connection with the title of the original act, refers only to pianos, organs, or other instruments like them; that these words in the act "or other musical instrument whatever" must be construed according to the doctrine ejusdem generis, and held to include only musical instruments similar to pianos and organs, and the Regina Concerto is not a musical instrument within the statutory meaning of those words. It is agreed an organ produces music when air is pumped into an air chest; that it causes certain valves to open through which air from the chest enters and sets in motion a reed; that the valve is opened by a person striking a key as he sits before the instrument and pumps air by moving the pedals. Pianos are agreed to be instruments wherefrom music is produced by the vibration of wire strings stretched over a sounding board; they being caused to vibrate by a person striking a key on the key board and causing a hammer to strike a string. The Regina Concerto is built in the shape of a cabinet, and produces music in several ways; i. e., by the vibration of a wire drawn over a sounding board, beating of drums, ringing of bells, and clashing of cymbals. It works automatically, and is so constructed that it is impossible for any one to play on it. The music is produced by power furnished by a quadruple spring motor contained in the cabinet, which is wound by a crank on the outside of the cabinet. When the motor is wound up, if a coin is dropped into a slot, music will be produced. Ten steel disks are in a chamber at the bottom of the appliance, each 32 inches in diameter and one-eighth of an inch thick. On the reverse side of the disks are innumerable projections like those on a cylinder in a music box. When the disk revolves, the projections catch star wheels running across the cabinet, and causes these wheels to revolve and touch the end of a hammer, whereupon the hammer strikes wires drawn over a sounding board. The drums, bells, and cymbals may all be set playing at the same time. It is agreed "piano" is a generic word covering all instruments where a player strikes a key, thereby causing a hammer to strike a wire stretched over a sounding board, and the term "organ" means an instrument where a player pumps air into an air chest and by touching a key causes a reed to vibrate; that in the musical world the Regina Concerto is regarded as a machine, and not as a musical instrument. We will add to the above description of the Regina Concerto that a picture in the record shows it is in the form of an upright cabinet which presents the appearance of a book case, except there are disks in it instead of shelves. It stands about eight feet high, and is, in fact, a musical slot machine, which is set playing by dropping a coin into a slot after the motor has been wound taut by turning a crank.

The statute invoked in defense is one forbidding a dramshop keeper to keep, exhibit, or use, or suffer to be kept, exhibited, or used "in his dramshop a piano, organ or other musical instrument whatever, for the purpose of performing upon or having the same performed upon in such dramshop." We ask whether the appliance in controversy is a musical instrument within the meaning of the statute, which, of course, being penal, is to be construed strictly. The question may be otherwise framed in these words: Did defendant violate the statute by keeping the appliance in his saloon? We consider it a musical instrument; one that could be performed on, and that winding it and dropping a coin in the slot would constitute performing on it. These things are true as they are understood in common speech. Its only purpose was to give forth musical sounds, and we reject the contention that it was not a musical instrument.

We reject, also, the argument that performing on a musical instrument consists only in playing on it in a common way, as by fingering the key board of a piano or the strings of a guitar; drawing the bow of a violin across the strings, or breathing into a horn. Nevertheless we do not think the appliance was such a musical instrument as the Legislature meant to designate in the statute. It will be observed the offense of a dramshop keeper consists not only in keeping, exhibiting, or using a musical instrument, or suffering it to be kept, exhibited, or used, but in doing so "for the purpose of performing upon or having the same performed upon" in his dramshop. If these words are to have any force, they must be held to mean the instrument must be kept, exhibited, or used by a dramshop keeper with the intention to perform or have some one else perform on it. There is no proof or agreement defendant kept the appliance to perform on it in person. What, then, is the meaning of the words "or having the same performed upon in such dramshop"? Can they be construed to mean that, if a dramshop keeper keeps an automatic musical instrument for the entertainment of any one who may wish to perform on it, and suffers any one to do so for his own amusement, the statute is violated? We think not, and that what is meant is keeping a musical instrument in a dramshop with the intention of the dramshop keeper to perform on it himself, or engage some one else to do so.

The agreed statement of facts only says plaintiff knew at the time the note and chattel mortgage were given defendant was conducting a dramshop and the Regina Concerto was bought to be placed therein, and that part of the money paid on the note had been dropped into the instrument in the form of nickels. This admission does not go to prove defendant bought the instrument for the purpose of performing on it, or having some one perform on it in the statutory sense. The word "having" as here used is not synonymous with "permitting," but imports making an arrangement to have an act or task done. There can be no doubt about the aim of the Legislature in enacting the statute in question. It was to prevent saloons from being made attractive by strains of instrumental music which would tend to draw persons into those places and increase the use of intoxicating liquors. We take it the language employed was considered broad enough to cover such musical instruments as were customarily used in dramshops at the time the statute was enacted, and played on by the proprietor or an employé. Probably instruments like the Regina Concerto were not used in saloons, or but little used, and hence the language of the statute was not directed against them and fails to include them though the object aimed at would be assisted if it did. Direct legislation against slot machines did not begin until later. The keeping of gaming tables and devices for gaming, like faro banks, roulette, and keno, was prohibited as far back as 1879, and perhaps further. Rev. St. 1879, § 1547; Rev. St. 1889, § 3808. But it was not until 1901 that the statute was amended so to include slot machines adapted to gambling uses. Sess. Acts 1901, p. 130 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1404). By that act section 3808 of the Statutes of 1889 was changed to read as it does in the present Revision, wherein the keeping of slot machines for gambling purposes is expressly forbidden. Rev. St. 1899, § 2194 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1404). Our opinion is that the language employed in the present statute forbidding the keeping of musical instruments in dramshops precludes the idea that the keeping of an instrument like the one in controversy would be an offense under the statute, and that the act was thus drawn because the use of such instruments in saloons was not at the time so general as to draw the attention of the Legislature to the evil and cause the employment of apt words to forbid the keeping of them.

We have said nothing about whether, under the doctrine of ejusdem generis, the words "or other musical instrument whatever," following the words "a piano, organ," and read in connection with the title of the act, which speaks of "certain musical instruments," can be held to include an instrument like the Regina Concerto. Said doctrine is applicable to cases of this character. State v. Gilmore, 98 Mo. 206, 11 S. W. 620. We think it is unnecessary to go into that phase of the case, for it is clear to our minds that on a proper construction of the language of the statute, without reference to said rule of construction, the instrument in controversy was not covered.

Therefore the judgment will be reversed and the cause remanded. All concur.

OREY et al. v. MOLLER et al.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Oct. 11, 1909.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 117*)—RES JUDICATA—CUSTODY OF CHILD.

Adverse determination of a proceeding in the circuit court by a father to obtain the custody of his infant daughter was not res judicata of his right to recover the custody of the child in habeas corpus in the Court of Appeals.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 119; Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

2. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 99*)—RIGHT TO CUSTODY.

While the child's welfare is the main consideration of the courts in determining the question of custody, the father as the natural parent has the first claim to the child's custody, unless he is unworthy; has abandoned it; is incapable to care for it; or there is some other strong reason for denying his right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 84; Dec. Dig. § 99;* Parent and Child, Cent. Dig. §§ 4–32.]

3. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 99*)—CUSTODY OF CHILD—ADOPTED PARENT.

Where a father had never surrendered his right to the custody of a child, the mere fact that the child's adoptive parents were better off financially than the father should not be regarded as a controlling circumstance in determining the question of custody.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 84; Dec. Dig. § 99;* Parent and Child, Cent. Dig. §§ 4–32.]

4. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 99*)—CUSTODY OF CHILDREN.

A father left his wife in Indiana prior to the birth of the child in controversy, with the wife's consent, to obtain work in Montana. During his stay there he refused to consent to his wife's parting with the child. The mother placed the child in the custody of a children's society, from which it was adopted by defendants. The father afterwards returned to his family, and sought to regain the custody of the child. His character was good, and he was a hard-working, economical man, inclined to use his wages to provide for his family. Held, that he was entitled to the child's custody.

Habeas corpus, on petition of George Orey and another against Roy E. Moller and others. Decree for petitioners.

A. S. Philips, for petitioners. W. A. Coley and Robt. A. Swink, for respondents.

GOODE, J. The petitioner George Orey seeks by a writ of habeas corpus issued from this court to obtain the custody of his daughter, Georgia, a child born October 2, 1908, and hence a few days over a year old. On May 5, 1909, Mary Orey, mother of the child and wife of the petitioner, placed the child in the Children's Home Society of Missouri, a corporation chartered under the laws of the state, with power, under certain circumstances, to receive from parents the release of their parental rights over children. Rev. St. 1899, c. 35 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 2014, 2015). Afterwards the child was placed by the Children's Home Society in the family of Roy E. Moller, said family consisting of Roy E. Moller and his wife, who resided at Maplewood, in St. Louis county. Those persons and the Children's Home Society executed a deed of adoption of the child on July 13, 1909, but the deed was not recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds of the county until August 24, 1909, which was after the institution of a prior proceeding by the petitioner before the judge of the circuit court of St. Louis county to recover the child. The circumstances leading up to the child being put in the Children's Home by its mother were these: The petitioners George Orey and his wife married in Vincennes, Ind., and lived there until September, 1908, at which time they had four children. He is a man 30 years old, and she a woman somewhat younger. Orey had an uncle living in Butte, Mont., who desired him to come out there to live. Orey is by trade a plumber; and, as he understood plumbers received higher wages in Montana than in Indiana, he desired to go. At that time the birth of the child in controversy was expected to occur inside a month, and a physician had been engaged to attend the mother during confinement. However, she coincided with her husband in his view that it was best for him to go west, and he went with her approval and consent. They owned an equity in a home in Vincennes, which he sold, turned over $50 of the money to his wife, and retained the remainder, $90, to pay his expenses to Butte, and to live on there until he could get work. He expected to remit money for expenses to his wife as soon as he began to draw wages. When he got to Butte, he found he could not get work unless he became a member of a Plumbers' Association, and that for some reason the association would not admit him to membership. Hence he worked at several jobs to earn a living for himself and family. He got employment on a ranch, as a bridge carpenter on a railroad, then as a common laborer, and again as a bridge carpenter. Between September and Christmas he sent his wife money three times, in all $60. Meanwhile she had moved to St. Louis to be with her mother, bringing with her one child, and leaving the others in an orphan's home in Vincennes.

She lived in St. Louis with her mother, giving birth, as stated, to the child in controversy in October. When she was strong enough, Mrs. Orey sought employment to help maintain herself and children, and was taken into the service of the St. Louis House and Window Cleaning Company. She worked hard, getting up at 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning to do scrubbing in a restaurant. Her husband wrote to her, and she to him, fortnightly, but he did not send her any money during March, April, and the fore part of May. He explained this as due to the fact he was working for a railroad company, and could not draw his wages under the company's arrangement for paying their employés. Mrs. Orey felt unable to look after the baby on account of the work she was doing, and for this reason placed it in the home. She wrote her husband she was thinking of doing so, and he objected, telling her to hold onto it as long as possible. When she wrote him she had put it in the home, he said he was coming back soon and would reclaim it. Orey saved his money, and in the summer returned with some $200. He at once set about getting his daughter from the home, but the manager would not tell him where it was. He ascertained it had been put in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Moller, and demanded it of them, but they refused to relinquish it. He then instituted a proceeding to recover it by habeas corpus, but the first application was determined against him in the circuit court of St. Louis county, and he then instituted the present proceeding in this court. The evidence shows without controversy that Orey is a steady and industrious man, and of good moral character. The Mollers appear to be excellent people, and in good financial condition. They have become attached to the child and desire to retain it, whereas Orey and his wife, from the natural affection of parents, desire to recover it in order to bring it up with its brothers and sisters, enjoy its companionship, and rear it according to their religion; they being Catholics and the Mollers Protestants.

The decision of the learned circuit judge adverse to the petitioner cannot be taken as res judicata of his right. Weir v. Marley, 99 Mo. 484, 12 S. W. 798, 6 L. R. A. 672. Brushing aside all technical grounds, like the omission to record the deed of adoption until the institution of the first proceeding by habeas corpus, and the further question as to whether the deed by the mother was so drawn and under such circumstances as to bind anybody, we go to the merits of the case as between the petitioner, the father of the child, and the respondents. It is true in controversies over the custody of children their own welfare is the main consideration of the courts in determining the question of custody. Nevertheless, the father, as the natural parent, has the first claim, unless he is unworthy to have the care and maintenance of his child; has abandoned it; is unable to take care of it; or there is some other strong reason for denying him the right. Weir v. Marley, supra. The mere fact that the adoptive parents are better off financially than he ought not to be regarded as a controlling circumstance, or poor parents might be denied the rearing of their children. Ex parte Davidge, 72 S. C. 16, 51 S. E. 269; Miller v. Wallace, 76 Ga. 479, 2 Am. St. Rep. 48. It is plain in the present case that Orey had in no way relinquished his rights as a parent. He never signed a deed releasing them, or consenting to the adoption of the child, and indeed protested even against his wife's putting it in a home. It is true in one of his letters he told her "to hold onto it as long as possible," and it is argued this was an implied consent to her surrendering the custody of it when it became impossible for her to support it. The remark implied she might make some temporary arrangement for the care of the child, but cannot be reasoned into consenting to relinquish it altogether, or that it might be adopted by some one else to the exclusion of his right to reclaim it when able to do so. Nothing had been intimated to him concerning such a course. His character has been proved good, all the evidence going to show he is a hard-working, economical man, and inclined to use his wages to provide for his family. The fact that he left his wife shortly before their child was expected to be born, and went West hunting employment, though much dwelt on as prejudicial, is not so, since he took this course with her judgment and approval, in the hope of bettering the lot of the family. Such vicissitudes are liable to occur in the life of any family, particularly in that of a poor one. It appears Orey did the best he could all along for his wife and children, is now with them earning a living wage in St. Louis, and we think his right is clear to have his daughter turned over to him. All concur.

Error from Court of Civil Appeals of Fifth Supreme Judicial District.

Action by J. W. Romans against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed to the Court of Civil Appeals, where the judgment was affirmed (114 S. W. 157), and it brings error. Reversed and remanded.

Coke, Miller & Coke and Jno. T. Craddock, for plaintiff in error. B. O. Evans, Thompson & Meade, and C. L. Elder, for defendant in error.

WILLIAMS, J. The defendant in error recovered the judgment from which this writ of error is prosecuted for damages for a personal injury received by him in the service of the plaintiff in error. The facts upon which his right of recovery depends are thus stated by the Court of Civil Appeals: "Plaintiff at the time of the injury was in the employ of defendant, loading cars with gumbo at a plant owned and controlled by defendant. At said plant there were three large embankments of burnt gumbo in parallel rows several hundred yards in length, probably 100 feet wide, and 12 to 15 feet high. These embankments were made originally by scooping out a ditch in the ground, piling dirt, old timbers, and coal therein, in alternate layers, and burning the black soil in this way so as to form a ballast known as 'burnt gumbo.' When the ballast in these embankments was ready to be moved, flat cars were run in on a track built parallel with and near to the edge of one of the embankments, and the ballast was thrown upon these cars with scoop shovels by men employed to do that at so much per car. These men so employed in loading the cars worked independently of each other, and according to their own methods and practically in their own time, there being, however, a foreman who inspected the cars as to quality and quantity when loaded, accepted them when sufficiently loaded, and gave to the individual loader credit for the car at the agreed price. The loading was begun at the outer edge of the embankment, and, when a few feet from the side of the embankment had been thus loaded and removed, the track crew would move the track nearer to the embankment from time to time, and the loading would then proceed until the whole of the embankment had been loaded. * * * Plaintiff had partly loaded a car when he stopped work for the night, and, when he returned next morning, the car had been moved some hundred feet or more from the position it occupied the evening before. In attempting to throw a shovel of gumbo on the car, he made a misstep, and his foot went into a hole, which caused him to fall across a ridge of gumbo that had formed along the edge of the cross-ties by some of the gumbo falling as it was being loaded, and thereby hurt himself as complained of. The hole into which he stepped and caused his fall was approximately 2½ feet long, 2 feet wide, and 1½ feet deep. This hole was filled, or nearly so, with fine dust or soot from the gumbo, which obscured the hole, and said hole was not seen by plaintiff, nor was its existence known to him. Plaintiff was inexperienced in the work, having only been employed at this work five days, a Sunday intervening. Defendant had a track crew out there who worked on and moved the track and leveled up the ground when necessary. The evidence fails to disclose how the hole came to be there, nor is the evidence sufficient as to circumstances to warrant a conjecture as to how it was produced." It is not to be understood from this statement that the evidence showed that the track on which stood the car which was being loaded by plaintiff had ever been moved, or that the track crew had ever worked over this ground after first laying the track, or that the condition had even arisen in which it would have been their duty to go over it. These things are all left to conjecture.

We must hold that the evidence is legally insufficient to give rise to any just inference of negligence on the part of the defendant. The fact upon which plaintiff must found a right of recovery is the existence of a hole concealed by the soft matter with which it was apparently filled; for we cannot agree that such a hole unconcealed at a place like this would be any more dangerous or any more evidence of negligence than a like hole would be if located by a wagon into which a servant is shoveling dirt or other matter. The risk from such a condition would be so slight and so obvious that the servant might well be expected to guard himself against it, and this would require no more experience than is possessed by the average adult. The place here in question is not like a depot platform, or a railroad track, or other similar place, and the same diligence in keeping it is not to be expected. There might be negligence in causing or permitting the existence of a hole concealed as this one was at any place where people ought to be expected to pass, but, to show it, the evidence must justify the inference that some of the employés of the defendant for whose conduct it is responsible caused that condition, or knew, or with ordinary care would have known, of its existence and have remedied it before plaintiff was hurt, and that some such happening as that of plaintiff's hurt could reasonably have been anticipated. As the Court of Civil Appeals have said, it cannot in any way be inferred how this hole was caused. The evidence fails to supply any fact from which any one can say when, how, or by whom the condition which made the use of the premises dangerous to plaintiff was produced. The evidence equally fails to show that the condition had existed so long as to justify an inference that the defendant knew, or by the exercise of any degree of diligence that could be exacted of it ought to have known, of it before plaintiff was hurt. If we undertake to determine the responsibility of the defendant for the acts or omissions of any of its servants, or of any class of its servants, we are at once confronted with the inquiry, what servant, or class of servants, caused or negligently permitted this condition? No hypothesis on which liability could be founded is supported by evidence, unless it is true that the mere existence of the hole in the condition described by the witnesses is of itself evidence of negligence. This could only be said if it were true that a hole so situated could not probably have existed without knowledge on part of some employé of defendant for whose negligence it is responsible, supposing that employé had exercised proper diligence; and it seems obvious that this is not true. The very gist of plaintiff's complaint is that the hole was concealed. It is not shown that any one ever saw it before the accident. It may have existed before the bed was laid, or have been caused in the burning, or have been excavated in the removal of the gumbo, or afterwards, and may have become filled as described by the witnesses at any stage of the work. It does not even appear whether or not the whole was in ground before covered by the gumbo beds. The Court of Civil Appeals says that the defendant ought not to have put an inexperienced servant to work at such a dangerous place, but this assumes the very fact to be proved, which is that the defendant is chargeable with knowledge of the condition that made the place dangerous. Besides, we cannot see that inexperience of the plaintiff has anything to do with the question. The concealed hole was as dangerous to an experienced as to an inexperienced servant, and either would have had sufficient knowledge to avoid such a risk if known to him.

It is further said that the track crew should have remedied the condition, but it is not shown that they had been over the ground after first laying the track, or that the circumstances had ever existed in which, in the proper discharge of their duties, they should have gone over it, or that had they done so the hole would have been discoverable by them. It does not appear that the hole was in existence and discernible at any time when they had worked or should have worked about this place. This incompleteness of the evidence renders it impracticable to discuss several of the questions of law raised by the parties with any certainty that they are the real questions in the case. For instance, the Court of Civil Appeals held that those who worked in filling other cars with gumbo at other times and places than those at which plaintiff was hurt were not his fellow servants, and to this we agree. They were not working at the same time and place nor on the same piece of work. But how is it possible to say that any act of those servants produced the condition in question, or, if so, that such act was negligent, when we cannot even conjecture how the hole was caused?

The Court of Civil Appeals further says: "That the place where the work of shoveling ballast was being done was constantly changing in the progress of the work does not affect the question at issue. It is true that the shoveling of the gumbo from the ground would have a tendency to leave the surface of the ground uneven, but not to the extent that it was so rendered by the hole into which the plaintiff slipped and caused him to fall. There is no evidence showing any other hole in like dimensions on the ground, or one that approximated its extent similarly situated; therefore such changing conditions have no application to this proposition." There was evidence of a statement of the plaintiff that he was hurt because he stood in an unusually low place, and had to throw higher, and there was evidence that the bed of the pit was made by the use of scrapers, not as level as a floor, but as level as the scrapers would leave it. It is evident that in shoveling the gumbo from such a place inequalities in the ground might be produced, and the mere doing of such work might produce transitory conditions the mere allowance of which would not constitute negligence on the part of the employer. The particular spots where shoveling was to be done were not permanent places kept by the master wherein the servant was to do his work, but were temporarily used and constantly changing. What the condition really was that caused plaintiff's injury was a question for the jury under proper instructions.

There is a qualification, applicable to such situations, of the general principle as to the master's duty in keeping the places where his servants are to do their work. Labatt, Master and Servant, § 588; 26 Cyc. 1324. Whether or not this should be given in a charge to the jury will, of course, depend on the facts developed at another trial, and whether or not those facts are sufficient to authorize the submission of the cause to a jury. As the evidence now stands, it furnishes no legal basis for a recovery by plaintiff.

Because of the insufficiency of the evidence the judgment must be reversed; but, as the facts may be more fully developed at another trial, the cause will be remanded.

Reversed and remanded.

GAINES, C. J. Mrs. M. E. Huber, for herself and as next friend for her minor child, Georgia Huber, brought this suit against the Texas & Pacific Railway Company and R. J. Oliphant to recover for the killing of Lawrence Huber, the husband and father, respectively, of plaintiffs, which killing it is alleged was occasioned by the negligence of defendant's servants operating a locomotive engine against and over the deceased. The two defendants duly moved that the cause be transferred to the federal court for trial, on the ground that the Texas & Pacific Railway Company was chartered by an act of Congress, and the application was overruled. The case went to trial and resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs against the railway company and against them in favor of Oliphant. That judgment was reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial as to the Texas & Pacific Railway Company, but was affirmed as to Oliphant. When the case was called for trial the second time in the district court, the Texas & Pacific Railway Company presented its petition and bond in due form for removal to the federal court, alleging that it was a corporation duly created by an act of the United States Congress. The application was again denied, and the case went to trial upon its merits and resulted in a judgment for the Texas & Pacific Railway Company, from which plaintiffs have appealed.

The Texas & Pacific Railway Company cross-assigned as error in the trial court the failure to transfer the case to the United States Circuit Court for the Northern District of Texas. The case of Matter of Dunn, 212 U. S. 374, 29 Sup. Ct. 299, 53 L. Ed. 558, is the most recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upon this subject, and we are unable to distinguish that case from this. That was a case in which Mrs. Dunn for herself and others brought suit against the Texas & Pacific Railway Company in a state district court at Dallas, Tex., and also against C. W. Slayter and Carl Rasmussen, who were, respectively, engineer and fireman on the Texas & Pacific Railway to recover damages for the negligent killing of J. J. Dunn, the husband of one of the plaintiffs and the father of the others. An application was filed, which was joined in by all of the parties defendants, to remove the case to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Texas, and the application was granted. Thereupon the plaintiffs in the suit filed an application in the Supreme Court of the United States praying that the District Judge of the United States for the Northern District of Texas and his court be commanded to disregard the order of removal of the state court, and to dismiss the case out of his court. The application was denied, and it was held that the case was properly removed. As this is the latest decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the subject, we are constrained to hold that the application to remove in this case should have been granted.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded for procedure in accordance with this opinion.

Appeal from District Court, Gonzales County; M. Kennon, Judge.

Callatino Benevidas was convicted of assault with intent to murder, and appeals. Affirmed.

W. B. Green, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant was convicted in the district court of Gonzales county on a charge of assault with intent to murder, and his punishment assessed at confinement in the penitentiary for a period of four years.

1. There is no statement of facts in the record. The motion for a new trial is confined to the single ground of the misconduct of the jury, in that they arrived at their verdict by lot; the allegation being in substance that, after the jury had arrived at the conclusion that appellant was guilty, the penalty was determined in the following manner: Eight of the jurors were in favor of assessing defendant's punishment at 5 years in the penitentiary, and four of the jurors were in favor of assessing his punishment at 2 years in the penitentiary, and that they agreed in advance that each juror should state the number of years he was in favor of assessing, and that the total sum thus agreed on should be divided by 12, and that the quotient should be the term assessed against appellant, and that the jury should be bound by the result thus to be ascertained, and that the aggregate number of years amounted to 48 years, and this sum divided by 12 made the verdict of 4 years. Evidence was heard on this motion, and two of the jurors, Willard and Griffin, by their testimony in substance affirmed the truth of the grounds contained in the motion. This allegation, however, was in substance disproved by the testimony of six others of the jury. The facts touching this matter are authenticated in proper bill, which we have carefully examined. We held in the late case of Fox v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 150, 109 S. W. 370, that where the question of misconduct of jury was made the matter of diligent inquiry by and under the direction of the trial court, and there was ample evidence to sustain the findings of said court that there was no such misconduct, the action of the court will not be disturbed. It was also stated in the case of Holt v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 15, 100 S. W. 156, that "where, upon motion for new trial after conviction of murder, the affidavit of two of the jurors claiming that the verdict was reached by lot, and nine of the jurors testified that no such agreement was made, the court was authorized under the testimony to determine that the verdict was not reached by lot." The same conclusion, in substance, was reached in the case of Goodman v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 191, 91 S. W. 795, and this ruling is supported by many other decisions of this court. Matters of this sort are cognizable by the trial court, and, unless the conclusion there reached is clearly wrong and unsupported by the testimony, we feel like we ought not to and cannot interfere.

2. In the brief filed herein by counsel for appellant complaint is made of the court's charge. This cannot avail appellant, for two reasons: In the first place, in the absence of statement of facts, we would not be authorized to assume that the charge was hurtful to appellant; and, again, no complaint of the court's charge was made in motion for a new trial.

As presented, there is no error for which we would be authorized to reverse the judgment of conviction, and it is accordingly affirmed.

BROOKS, J., absent.

On Motion for Rehearing.

RAMSEY, J. Counsel for appellant calls our attention to a very patent and obvious error of fact in the opinion of the court heretofore rendered. It is therein stated that there was no statement of facts contained in the record. This statement is wholly inaccurate. Excuses for oversight in so stating are unnecessary, and, considering the care we should exercise in respect to such a matter, ought to be, and doubtless would be, unavailing. However, this misstatement of fact in no way affects the accuracy and correctness of the opinion. There was no complaint of the court's charge made in motion for a new trial, and under the terms of article 723 of our Code of Criminal Procedure of 1895, and a long line of de-

Davidson, P. J., dissenting.

Appeal from District Court, Cooke County; Clem B. Potter, Judge.

Sam Davis was convicted of manslaughter, and appeals. Affirmed.

Potter & Culp and Davis & Thomason, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of manslaughter, and his punishment assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary.

The only bill of exceptions in the record presents the following: While defendant was upon the stand as a witness in his own behalf, and while he was being cross-examined by R. R. Bell, private counsel for the state, and after the defendant had testified that he did not shoot at Ray Clark, or see Ray Clark when he fired into the saloon, said state's counsel asked the defendant the following question: "You have been indicted for assault with intent to murder in the Ray Clark case?" To this the defendant's counsel objected, because the record is the best evidence, and because an indictment found by the grand jury is no evidence of guilt, and because it is an effort to get before the jury the opinion of the grand jury in reference to the transaction now being investigated. The objections being overruled by the court, appellant answered that he had been indicted by the grand jury for assault with intent to murder Ray Clark. The following transcript from the stenographer's notes is attached to this bill and made a part of the judge's qualification thereto: "Cross-examination of Sam Davis by R. R. Bell: Q. What was your reason for shooting the second shot? A. To hold the front of that house, to keep any one from coming out of that house and from shooting me down. Q. You have been indicted for assault to murder in the Ray Clark case? A. Yes, sir; I guess I have. I am under bond. The Court: I don't think it is material. Q. You claim that you didn't shoot at Ray Clark at all? A. No, sir; I didn't. Q. And what was your explanation? A. I said I shot down through the house for the purpose in order to hold the front of that house, to keep any one that might be in the house from coming out and shooting me down. I knew Dud Clark worked in that house, and, of course, I expected him to come with both hands full of six-shooters."

This testimony was admissible. Appellant had stated he shot into the house to keep any one from coming out of same to assault him. Now, to show the motive for making said statement, the state called upon appellant to prove that he was indicted for shooting at Ray Clark, and that that is the reason he swore he did not shoot at Ray Clark, but merely shot into the house to keep some one from coming out of the house; that he knew Dud Clark worked in the house, and expected him to come out with both hands full of six-shooters. Where a party gives testimony, it is always germane, proper, and legitimate to show a motive for said statement, and certainly, if appellant is indicted for assault to murder upon Ray Clark, this would give him a strong motive for swearing that he did not shoot at Ray Clark, and the fact that at the time he gave such testimony he was indicted becomes a pertinent inquiry, and goes to that extent to discredit the accuracy of his statement when he says he did not shoot at Clark. This is not a case where there is a bare controversy in the testimony; but the defense is trying in this testimony to make out a perfect defense and to show a legitimate and lawful purpose in all of his acts which were part and parcel of the res gestæ of the transaction. Now, when he states he did not shoot at Clark, it very pertinently suggests itself to any one's mind that he might be preparing a defense to the indictment for assault with intent to murder said Clark, or at lease the fact of being indicted suggested that this might be his motive for so swearing, and, therefore, goes to reflect upon the credibility of the statement and general credibility of the witness.

In this connection the court charged the jury as follows: "You are instructed that the defendant cannot be convicted in this case for shooting at or threatening to shoot at any other person than the deceased. He is on trial alone for the killing of Lowe Clark." To this extent this was clearly a admitted. Appellant does not complain of the lack of proper limitation of the testimony; but the objection that appellant makes is that it was an indirect way of eliciting the opinion of the grand jury in reference to a material part of the evidence upon this trial. We do not think there was any error in the admission of the testimony. This is especially so in the light of the verdict in this case, which was for two years, the minimum punishment for manslaughter. The evidence clearly supports the verdict. The jury having given appellant the minimum punishment, we cannot see how the testimony, even if erroneous, could have injured appellant.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is in all things affirmed.

DAVIDSON, P. J. (dissenting). This conviction was for manslaughter; the punishment assessed being two years' confinement in the penitentiary.

The serious question urged by appellant is that the facts are not sufficient to support the conviction for manslaughter; that it was a case purely of self-defense. Pretermitting a discussion of this question, the evidence is very cogent showing that appellant acted only in self-defense. There had been trouble between the parties in which the deceased was the aggressor. While these troubles were of a wordy nature, the evidence is that the deceased was the provoking party. After the last wordy altercation, in which threats were made by deceased and intimations that he would renew the troubles, the parties separated, and appellant armed himself in anticipation of further trouble. While walking along the sidewalk with a friend en route to a wagon yard to get his team for the purpose of leaving town, appellant passed the door of a saloon in which was stationed the deceased, his son, and a friend. There is some contradiction at this point as to who spoke first. The difficulty occurred, and deceased was shot by appellant. The evidence is to the effect that deceased was making a demonstration to draw a pistol, and a pistol was found upon his body. Appellant fired one other shot, but not at the deceased. The state contended that appellant fired this shot at Ray Clark, son of deceased. Appellant's evidence is to the effect that the shot was fired into the saloon generally—not at anybody at all, but as a warning to those on the inside, who were friends of the deceased, not to make a further attack upon him.

In this condition of the record, and while appellant was upon the stand testifying in his own behalf, a bill of exceptions recites the following: That while appellant was being cross-examined by private counsel representing the state, and after appellant testified he did not shoot at Ray Clark, or see Ray Clark when he fired into the saloon, said with attempt to murder in the Ray Cla case?" Appellant objected, because the re ord is the best evidence, and because an i dictment found by the grand jury is no ev dence of guilt, and because it is an effort get before the jury the opinion of the gra jury in reference to the transaction now u der investigation. The objections being ove ruled, the witness was required to answ that he had been indicted by the grand ju for assault with intent to murder Ray Clar In connection with this, and as a part c the bill, it is recited that the stenographer' notes, which are made a part of the qualifica tion of the bill, show: "Q. What was you reason for shooting the second shot? A To hold the front of that house, to keep an one from coming out of that house and fron shooting me down. Q. You have been indict ed for assault to murder in the Ray Clark case? A. Yes, sir; I guess I have. I am under bond." Then follow the objections of appellant. The court said: "I don't think it is material. (Defendant excepts.) Q. You claim that you did not shoot at Ray Clark at all? A. No, sir; I didn't. Q. And what was your explanation? (Defendant objects.) A. I said I shot down through the house for the purpose in order to hold the front of that house, to keep any one that might be in the house from coming out and shooting me down. I knew Dud Clark worked in that house, and, of course, I expected him to come with both hands full of six-shooters."

We are of opinion that this evidence was inadmissible. It was but the expression of the grand jury of what they thought of the case, and of the shooting, and appellant's connection with it. The indictment against appellant for the shooting at Ray Clark was a part and parcel of the transaction under investigation, if as a matter of fact he did shoot at him. It was denied by appellant, and the finding of the grand jury, as shown on the face of the bill of the indictment, was used to contradict appellant on this issue. It was but their opinion, and was not legitimate testimony for the purpose of impeachment. See Long v. State, 17 Tex. App. 128; Shamburger v. State, 24 Tex. App. 433, 6 S. W. 540; Taylor v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 381, 97 S. W. 474; Moore v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 54, 79 S. W. 565; De La Garza v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 61 S. W. 484. It will be noted that between the testimony of appellant and Ray Clark there is a sharp conflict, as set out in the bill of exceptions. The testimony of Ray Clark, or that for the state, is to the effect that appellant fired the second shot into the house where Ray Clark was for the purpose of killing Ray Clark. Appellant's testimony is directly to the effect that he shot into the front of the house to prevent those whom he says were in conspiracy against his life from coming out to where he was to kill him. A conflict of evidence will not justify the introduction of testimony to impeach or sustain a witness. Long v. State, 17 Tex. App. 128; Rushing v. State, 25 Tex. App. 607, 8 S. W. 807; Britt v. State, 21 Tex. App. 215, 17 S. W. 255; McGrath v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 413, 34 S. W. 127, 941; Harris v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 714; Murphy v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 40 S. W. 978; Jacobs v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. App. 353, 59 S. W. 1113.

Here firing of the second shot was proved by the state and the appellant. There was no conflict upon this question; the conflict being in regard to the reason for firing the second shot. The indictment, or the fact that it was returned by the grand jury against appellant, charging him with assault with intent to murder Ray Clark, could have no bearing upon this issue, and was thoroughly illegitimate. It was but the opinion of the grand jury, found in the fact of the return of the bill, that they believed appellant shot at Ray Clark, and did not, as he testified, shoot to prevent Clark and others from coming out of the house and making an attack upon him. This act of the grand jury could not be used to settle or prove which theory was correct. As before stated, it would be but a conflict in the evidence, and only upon the purpose for which appellant fired the shot. Under this state of case, under all the authorities, this evidence was not permissible, either to sustain the state's evidence or to impeach appellant. Here, the issue as to the shooting being admitted, it was a sharp contest between the testimony of Clark and appellant as to the purpose, and the act of the grand jury is thrown into the scale to determine that fact against appellant's testimony. They saw proper to believe Clark, and thus found the indictment. It was but their conclusion of the effect of Clark's testimony as against appellant's. The authorities cited are, I think, in point, and settle the matter for appellant, and against the state's contention.

Believing there was error in the admission of the testimony, and of such a nature as to require a reversal of the judgment, I respectfully enter my dissent, and believe the judgment ought to be reversed, and the cause remanded for another trial.

PHILLIPS v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. June 9, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 3, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1038*)—APPEAL—INSTRUCTIONS — OMISSION — NECESSITY OF REQUEST.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1173*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ALIBI.

In a prosecution for hog theft, the court charged that if defendant was present with another, and they or either of them, acting with a common purpose into which defendant entered, undertook to steal a hog, then defendant would be a principal, and that defendant's mere bodily presence without participating in the intent would not make him guilty as the principal, nor would his subsequent receipt of some of the stolen meat make him guilty of theft, but that it must be shown that he participated in the original taking. Held, that the court's failure to affirmatively charge on alibi was not ground for reversal under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, § 723, providing that a conviction shall not be reversed unless the alleged error was calculated to prejudice defendant's rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3165; Dec. Dig. § 1173.*]

Appeal from District Court, Cherokee County; James I. Perkins, Judge.

Gabe Phillips was convicted of hog theft, and he appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of hog theft; his punishment being assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary.

The alleged owner lost two hogs. They were white in color. Appellant and a number of other negroes were charged with the theft of a hog. The taking of the hogs occurred on Saturday evening. The search for the hogs was made on Monday, and freshly killed hog meat found secreted at the residence of the different parties. Much of this meat was from a hog that had been skinned. The meat had all been secreted in different ways. At appellant's house the meat was found under the floor wrapped in a sack. The state's case was shown by circumstantial evidence. A negro girl testified she saw a white hog in the door of appellant's house on Sunday morning, at which time it was intact except the head was gone. There are other circumstances tending to connect appellant with the matter of more or less cogency, but we deem it unnecessary to go into a detailed statement of these matters. Appellant took the stand, and denied having any connection with the theft of the hog as well as having received any of the stolen meat. He accounted for having hog meat by reason of a purchase of meat about two weeks prior to this transaction, and it may be fairly assumed that he had made the purchase of meat about which he testified, and about the time he stated. The meat, however, that he purchased was not skinned, nor did it have any shot in it; the seller testifying that the hog from which the meat came which he sold appellant was not shot, but that he had knocked it in the head with an axe. The meat found under appellant's house had small sized shot in it about No. 4 or No. 6.

There are no bills of exception in the record. There were some exceptions noted in the statement of facts, but in such a general confused way that they do not sufficiently present any matter for revision.

The charge of the court is criticised sharply, the principal contentions being, first, the failure of the court to charge alibi; and, second, that it did not sufficiently charge the jury that, if appellant only received meat and was not connected with the original taking, he could not be convicted under this indictment, it being only for theft. The charge in this respect is as follows: "All persons are principals who are guilty of acting together in the commission of an offense. So, in this case, if the hog or hogs were fraudulently taken as alleged in the indictment, and the defendant was present with another or others at such taking, and they or either of them, acting with a common purpose and design into which defendant entered, and which he understood, to steal such hog or hogs, shot and took such hog or hogs, then in such case the defendant would be a principal in such theft, no matter what part he performed in such unlawful taking, or whether he in fact gave any physical aid or not in such act of taking. On the other hand, mere bodily presence of the defendant, without participation in the intent and purpose to commit the theft, would not make him guilty as such principal, nor would his subsequent receipt and concealment of some of the stolen meat knowing it to be stolen (if it was stolen and he did receive it) of itself make him guilty of the theft. In order to convict the defendant, the jury must find that he participated as a principal in the original taking. But if two hogs belonging to McGill were stolen at or about the same time, and the defendant participated as a principal in the theft of either, it would be sufficient for his conviction, and it would be immaterial whether he participated in the theft of both or as to which particular hog of the two he helped to steal." The court also gave a charge on circumstantial evidence. Appellant did not request special instructions. His objections to the charge are urged in motion for a new trial. In the recent case of Jones v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 131, 110 S. W. 741, 126 Am. St. Rep. 776, the rule was laid down in regard to charges on alibi and the failure of the court to give same that it would not be ground for reversal unless appellant requested special instructions covering that question and it was refused, and it was further held in that case that the charge given sufficiently covered that question. The charge in this case perhaps more strongly presents the question of alibi than was done in the Jones Case, supra. Under that authority, this contention of appellant is not well taken. While the charge in regard to concealing property is rather negatively given, yet the jury are instructed that he would not be guilty as a principal if he received and concealed the stolen meat, knowing it to be stolen, if it was stolen, and he received it; that this would not constitute him guilty of theft. The court further stated to the jury that, in order to convict appellant, they must find that he participated as a principal in the original taking, and this charge was given directly in connection with reference to the clause in regard to receiving and concealing stolen property. Under the provisions of article 723 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1895, as construed by this court, this charge seems to be sufficient; at least, it is not sufficiently erroneous to require a reversal. We would suggest, however, that wherever issues are presented by the testimony that a pertinently affirmative charge be given presenting those matters. But, as the record is before us, we are of opinion the errors are not of sufficient importance to require a reversal. Therefore the judgment is affirmed.

J. H. Fulkerson was convicted of aggravated assault, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Garnett & Eldridge and Hopkins & Milliken, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. This is an appeal prosecuted from a conviction for the offense of aggravated assault, obtained in the county court of Denton county.

The testimony of the state is to the effect, in substance, that appellant, practically without excuse, struck one T. E. Gerren, while his back was towards him, some eight or ten blows on the head with his ticket punch, inflicting serious wounds, knocking him down, and rendering him unconscious. The record shows that the wounds were of such gravity as to confine Gerren to his bed, and that one of them was 2½ to 3 inches long, breaking the skin and penetrating to the bone. Appellant claimed he acted in self-defense, and on this issue the testimony was decidedly conflicting. The case was tried before the court without the intervention of a jury. The state's evidence, if believed, makes out a case.

1. Among other things, it is urged there is no sufficient evidence that the injury was serious, as that term is used in the statute, and we are referred, to sustain this proposition, to numerous decisions of this court. It seems to the writer that the decisions have gone very far on this line, and have required the injuries to be indeed serious in fact before a conviction could be sustained under this subdivision of our statute. Each case, after all, however, rests somewhat on its own facts. Our judgment is, however, that as here presented the evidence is sufficient. Wilson v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 64, 29 S. W. 41, and Stevens v. State, 27 Tex. App. 461, 11 S. W. 459.

2. When the case was called for trial, appellant made his second application for a continuance for want of the testimony of J. M. McCommas, who was alleged to reside in the city of Dallas, and R. M. Low, who was alleged to reside at Letot, in Dallas county. No process was issued for either of these witnesses until on or about the day the case was called for trial, which was on the 21st day of January, 1908. The application itself shows that it was the second application. Among other essentials required in a second or subsequent application is that same shall show that the testimony cannot be procured from any other source known to defendant, and it has been uniformly held that an application which fails to show this is insufficient. McCulloch v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 268, 33 S. W. 230; Pinckord v. State, 13 Tex. App. 468; Henderson v. State, 5 Tex. App. 134. It also appears, by an affidavit of McCommas attached as an exhibit to the application, that he was not a witness to the difficulty, but had talked to a news man on the train, who said to him, in substance, that Gerren, the assaulted party, had cursed Fulkerson, and Fulkerson told him to sit down, when Gerren made a play to draw something from his pocket, when Fulkerson hit him. So, in any event, the case ought not to have been continued under any circumstances for the testimony of this witness. In view of the contest filed by the county attorney, it is far from certain that the witness R. M. Low in fact lived in Dallas county, and, as presented, in any event it is not certain under any circumstances that the court would have been warranted in granting the application. Whatever may be true of this matter, it is certain that, in view of the fact that appellant produced a witness who was present, one Harlow, who testified as an eye-witness to all the facts, in substance, which it was averred could be proven by the missing witnesses, the court did not err in overruling the application.

There is no other matter of record that requires notice. The case was essentially one of fact, which was submitted to the trial court, who had far better opportunities than we could have of judging of the credibility of the witnesses, and under the settled rules there is no reason why we could or should interfere.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment of conviction is in all things affirmed.

MORRIS v. STATE.

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 125*)—SUFFICIENCY—DUPLICITY.

An indictment charging that accused unlawfully kept and exhibited, for the purpose of gaming, a gaming table and bank, is not duplicitous as charging the keeping and exhibiting of a gaming table for the purpose of gaming, and also the keeping and exhibiting of a bank for the same purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 334–400; Dec. Dig. § 125;* Gaming, Cent. Dig. §§ 224, 232.]

2. GAMING (§ 98*)—PROSECUTION—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction under an indictment charging the keeping and exhibiting, for the purpose of gaming, of a gaming table and bank.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gaming, Cent. Dig. §§ 291–298; Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

3. GAMING (§ 102*)—PROSECUTION—INSTRUCTION.

In a prosecution for keeping and exhibiting, for the purpose of gaming, a gaming table and bank, the game being monte, failure to charge what is a banking game was not error; the statute expressly defining monte to be a banking game.

4. GAMING (§ 102*)—CRIMINAL OFFENSES—INSTRUCTIONS.

Penal Code 1895, art. 388a (Acts 30th Leg. 1907, p. 108, c. 49), makes it a penitentiary offense to exhibit, for the purpose of gaming, any policy table, or gaming table, bank, wheel, or device which has no name, etc. Article 384 expressly enumerates monte as a banking game. Held, that in a prosecution for keeping and exhibiting, for the purpose of gaming, a gaming table and bank, where there was no question that, if monte was dealt or exhibited, it was for the purpose of obtaining bets, failure to charge that the banking or dealing of the game of monte at a place not usually resorted to for gaming is not a felony under article 388a was not error.

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 942*)—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

Evidence simply of an impeaching character is not such newly discovered evidence as will warrant a new trial.

Appeal from District Court, Travis County; Chas. A. Wilcox, Judge.

Lee Morris was convicted of gaming, and appeals. Affirmed.

A. W. Bloor, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. The indictment charges that appellant "did then and there unlawfully keep and exhibit, for the purpose of gaming, a gaming table and bank." Appellant moves in arrest of judgment, because the indictment is duplicitous, in that it charges appellant with keeping and exhibiting a gaming table for the purpose of gaming, and that it charges him with keeping and exhibiting a bank for the purpose of gaming. This form of indictment has been sustained, as being not subject to this criticism, by the decisions. See Tellison v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 389, 33 S. W. 1082; Parker v. State, 13 Tex. App. 213; Campbell v. State, 2 Tex. App. 187. And it is the same form of indictment found in Pruitt v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 316, 109 S. W. 171. We are of opinion that the indictment is not duplicitous, nor subject to criticism.

Appellant asked a special instruction to the jury to return a verdict of not guilty, on the ground the evidence is not sufficient. This was refused by the court, and correctly. The evidence, in substance, is that appellant exhibited a game of monte at what is known as "Brock's Club"—that is, the club over Brock's saloon, in what is called the "First Ward." The testimony for the state shows that money was bet at this banking game. This was denied by appellant. There was quite a lot of testimony pro and con in regard to it; the issue being sharply drawn that appellant did exhibit and deal monte, and that there was betting at the game.

It is contended that the court erred in not defining what is a banking game. We are of opinion this was not necessary, where the banking game is one enumerated and designated as such by the statute. Pruitt v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 316, 109 S. W. 171. The statute expressly defines monte as a banking game.

It is also contended that the court erred in not instructing the jury that the banking of, or dealing, a game of monte at a place not usually resorted to for gaming, is not a felony under article 388a of the Penal Code of 1895 (Acts 30th Leg. 1907, p. 108, c. 49). We do not think there is any merit in this contention. Article 388a makes it a penitentiary offense to exhibit, for the purpose of gaming, any policy table, any gaming table, bank, wheel, or device which has no name, etc. Article 384 of the Penal Code expressly enumerates monte as a banking game. There is no question, under the facts of this case, that, if monte was dealt or exhibited, it was for the purpose of obtaining bets, because the parties bet at the bank under the state's testimony. This was, of course, denied by appellant; but that issue was settled by the jury. There is, therefore, no merit in appellant's contention that, before it would be a felony to exhibit a banking game, it must be exhibited at a place where people resort. Of course, somebody must resort to the game in order to have a bettor when the bank is exhibited; but this is not part of the definition of the offense, as it is with reference to some of the gaming laws. It is a violation of the law to exhibit for the purpose of gaming the bank games mentioned at any place or time. It is not necessary that it be exhibited at a place where people usually resort.

Appellant also suggests newly discovered testimony; but he admits it is not within the rule laid down by the statute. The evidence is simply of an impeaching character, and in fact, as the matter is presented, it does not come within the rules of newly discovered evidence from any standpoint. By proper diligence the testimony could have easily been obtained, if it existed.

As the record is presented to us, we are of opinion this judgment should be affirmed; and it is accordingly so ordered.

Where a juror testified that he had formed an opinion from reading newspapers, which it would take evidence to remove, but that, if chosen, he could and would lay aside his opinion and

2. HOMICIDE (§ 183*)—EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY.

Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, defendant's theory was that the relations of his wife had taken all the property he had and caused a separation between them, evidence that prosecutrix's uncle, after the assault, obtained from defendant a check for $348.05, was res inter alios acta, and not admissible as tending to show a conspiracy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 730*)—APPEAL—MISCONDUCT OF ATTORNEY—PREJUDICE.

An improper remark of the district attorney, in argument, that defendant would be lucky even if he got the limit, because, had prosecutrix's parents been of a different nationality, he would have been killed, was not ground for reversal; the court, on objection, having ordered counsel to confine himself to the facts, and having instructed the jury not to consider the remarks in arriving at a verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 304*)—ASSAULT TO MURDER—ACCIDENTAL SHOOTING—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction that if the jury believed from the evidence, or had a reasonable doubt, that defendant drew his pistol, not to assault prosecutrix, but to protect himself from danger taken from his standpoint at the time, and while endeavoring to make prosecutrix and her companions talk to him relative to getting his wife back, prosecutrix took hold of the barrel of the pistol, which, in the scuffle, was accidentally discharged and prosecutrix was wounded, defendant should be found not guilty, sufficiently presented the theory of accidental shooting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 636; Dec. Dig. § 304.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 800*)—INSTRUCTIONS—USE OF TERMS—SCUFFLE.

Where the state's evidence showed that defendant pulled his pistol and presented it to the breast of the prosecutrix, that she grabbed and pushed it away, and by that means it was discharged, a reference by the court to such transaction, in its instructions, as a "scuffle," was not so misleading as to require a reversal.

Appeal from District Court, Bexar County; Edward Dwyer, Judge.

Arthur Groszoehmigen was convicted of assault with intent to murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Chambers, Hertzberg & Barrett, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of assault with intent to murder; his punishment being assessed at 10 years' confinement in the penitentiary.

Substantially the evidence is that appellant married the daughter of Gus Real. There came up some family disturbance, and his wife finally went to her father's home and refused further to live with appellant. Previous to his wife returning to her father, his sister-in-law, the assaulted party, was at the place. When this was over, she desired to return home, and appellant accompanied her. En route, her testimony is that appellant made love to her, and wanted her to run away with and marry him; that they would go to Mexico. This she declined. Later on appellant went to her father's residence, and at some point about the premises, away from the residence, renewed his offers of love and marriage, accompanied by threats in case of refusal. On the day of the assault the assaulted party and her sister and brother were in a wagon, returning from San Antonio to their residence some miles in the country, when they met appellant, who had been down to the family residence to interview his wife. A conversation occurred, which was interrupted by appellant's horse and buggy going away, which he followed, and the wagon drove on. When they reached the gate near the residence, they found appellant had preceded them to that point, had hitched his horse, and was awaiting their arrival. When they came, he walked up to the wagon and engaged them in a conversation, the details of which we deem unnecessary to narrate. While so engaged he drew his pistol. The state's evidence shows that he presented it at the breast of the assaulted girl. She grabbed the pistol and pushed it away. The pistol fired, and she was shot in the stomach.

The contention of the state is that it was an intentional shooting. Appellant's contention was that he had the pistol out, did not point it, and that the girl, in seizing the pistol, caused it to fire accidentally; that he had no intention of shooting her. There was quite a lot of testimony in regard to the family troubles. Appellant testified he stopped the wagon in order to request an intervention on the part of those in the wagon to induce his wife to return and live with him. He denied everything in regard to offers of love and marriage to the assaulted party, stating that he had no intention to do so, and never made any such offers, and that at the time of the shooting he was trying to induce them to get his wife to return and live with him; that "he only loved his wife and child." It is agreed that appellant had furnished money to his father-in-law on two occasions, at one time $125, and the other $100. His contention is that his father-in-law compelled him to furnish the money, or ordered him to do so, while the evidence for the state is to the effect that he furnished it willingly, for the support of his wife and child. There is also evidence that a note of $1,400, guaranteed by a lien on land, was also delivered by appellant to the father-in-law. Appellant's contention is that this $1,400 note was forced out of him in order to get his property away from him. The state's evidence is to the effect that the note was turned over willingly by appellant for the benefit of his wife and child, at any rate for the child. This, perhaps, is a sufficient statement of the case to review the questions.

1. The first bill of exceptions was reserved to the ruling of the court permitting the witness Hildebrand to sit as a juror in the case. The bill recites that, in answer to questions propounded by counsel for appellant, he stated that he had formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, such as would influence his action in arriving at a verdict. Challenge for cause was interposed. The court signed the bill, with the qualification that the juror stated that, while he had formed an opinion from reading the newspapers as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, he could lay same aside and not be influenced thereby, and could try the case according to law and under the evidence, as shown by answers which were set out in Exhibit A, attached to and made a part of the bill. To these questions bearing upon this particular phase of it the witness answered that "the opinion I have would not influence me as a juror, but it would take evidence to remove it," and this in regard to the guilt or innocence of the accused. Upon a further examination he stated that he could and would lay aside whatever opinion he had as to the guilt or innocence of defendant, and go into the jury box, and give him a fair and impartial trial according to law. The court then asked witness: "What about your opinion?" Witness answered: "The opinion I have formed is from reading the papers. The Court: Simply from reading newspapers? A. Yes, sir; I knew nothing of the facts, except what I saw in the papers. If what the papers said was true, then I have formed an opinion. The Court: Is it just from newspaper reading? You have not talked with any of the witnesses? A. No, sir; I know nothing about it. The Court: The opinion you have is from the newspapers? A. From reading the papers alone. The Court: Cannot you lay aside your opinion, and go into the jury box, and try the case according to the law and the evidence? A. I think so. By Mr. Baker: Give the court a positive answer. A. I could and would. By Mr. Chambers: I believe that you answered that you had formed an opinion from reading the papers, and it would require evidence to remove that opinion? A. I have simply an opinion. Q. And it would require evidence to remove it? A. Yes, sir. The Court: Will you try this man according to any opinion you may have formed from reading the newspapers? A. No, sir; it is merely an opinion from reading the papers. It is not a definite conclusion. The Court: Would that opinion influence you in finding a verdict? A. It would not influence me a particle. The Court: Would you leave it aside, and try the case according to the law and the evidence? A. Yes, sir. The Court: I think he is qualified. By Mr. Chambers: We except to the juror, because we consider him disqualified, and we desire it to be shown that we have exhausted all our challenges. The Court: I understand that it will not require any evidence to remove that opinion. A. No, sir; it is formed from reading the papers. The Court: You can go into the jury box free from any opinion, and be ready and willing to receive law and evidence, and decide according to the law and evidence. A. Yes, sir. The Court: He is qualified. Mr. Chambers: Note our exception." The contention by appellant is that the juror was disqualified, and the inference is that he had exhausted his peremptory challenges. The question is whether or not the juror was disqualified from sitting in the case. Under the decisions, we think this must be answered in the negative. See Morrison v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 473, 51 S. W. 358; Tellis v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 574, 61 S. W. 717; Trotter v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 468, 36 S. W. 278; Parker v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 334, 77 S. W. 783. These cases seem to be in point, as well as some of the authorities cited in the above citations.

Another bill of exceptions recites that appellant offered in evidence a check for $348.05, drawn on the Alamo National Bank in favor of Adolph Real, an uncle of the prosecuting witness, and said money was retained by said relative. It is contended this check was admissible to show a conspiracy. Appellant's theory was that the relatives of his wife had taken all of the property he had, and caused the separation of himself and wife. This check was offered in evidence while appellant was on the stand in his own behalf. The bill is signed, with the qualification that the above transaction occurred after the date of the alleged shooting, and occurred between defendant and one Adolph Real, an uncle of the prosecuting witness, and was irrelevant and immaterial, and res inter alios acta, and, having occurred after the assault, could not affect the case, as shown by Exhibit A attached. The exhibit shows, in substance, as follows: That the check was for $348.05, drawn on the Alamo National Bank. The question was asked: "How did he manage to cash that check?" Mr. Baker stated: "That is a transaction which occurred between other parties. The Court: Yes; I do not see anything material in that. Mr. Chambers: I want to show that there was a conspiracy existing. Mr. Baker: Let counsel show the conspiracy first. Mr. Chambers: There was a conspiracy existing to get the property, and I am showing that the relatives of the wife had the property. We expect to show by this witness that Mr. Real came and got the check for $348.05, and after cashing it the money was to be brought to defendant, and he has not seen Mr. Real since. Mr. Real is not the father of the defendant's wife; but he is a relative, and knew all about the matter, and he got the check and kept the money. Mr. Baker: When was this money supposed to have been gotten? Mr. Chambers: We will show all that. A. It was after the shooting. The Court: It has absolutely no bearing on this case. Mr. Chambers: We except." This is the bill, with the exhibit. We are not cited to any authorities that would make this transaction admissible as evidence. Nor do we understand how a financial transaction occurring between an uncle of the injured woman and appellant in regard to the $348.05 could have affected the prior transactions which resulted in the shooting of the girl. It would seem, from the exhibit to the bill, that Adolph Real kept the money himself. Such is the statement of counsel. We are of opinion that, as this matter is presented, this character of testimony was not admissible to show why appellant shot his sister-in-law, or throw any light upon that transaction. These were matters occurring between other parties, and, so far as the bill would indicate, without any bearing at all on the assault, or the trouble between appellant resulting in the shooting of his sister-in-law. We are, therefore, of opinion there was no error in rejecting this testimony.

Another bill of exceptions is reserved to the closing remarks of the district attorney, wherein he used the following language to the jury: "That defendant would be, indeed, lucky, even if he got the limit, because, had parents of Martha Real been of a different nationality, he would have been killed." Appellant then and there, at the time of the making of said remark, excepted, and tendered his bill. This bill is qualified as follows by the court: "That counsel for the state was stopped from making such remarks, and ordered to confine himself to the facts, and the jury was instructed by the court not to consider the remarks of the district attorney at arriving at a verdict." We are of opinion that such remark as the one quoted should not be indulged; but, as explained by the court, under instructions given the jury in regard to the matter, we are of opinion that it is not of sufficient importance to require a reversal of the judgment.

It is contended that the court erred in not giving certain requested instructions. These are not contained in the record, only being mentioned in motion for a new trial. The court charged the jury in regard to assault with intent to murder and aggravated assault, and we are of opinion that the charges sufficiently presented the issues raised by the testimony. There was evidence which called for instructions on both theories, and we think they were sufficiently presented.

It is contended, further, however, that the court did not sufficiently charge the theory of accidental shooting. This portion of the charge reads as follows: "If you believe from the evidence, or have a reasonable doubt, that defendant, at the time of the alleged assault, drew his pistol, not for the purpose of making an assault upon Martha Real, but for the purpose of protecting himself from any real or apparent danger, taken from his standpoint at the time, and whilst endeavoring to make Martha Real and her companions talk to him relative to getting his wife back to him, and whilst so engaged, if you further believe, or have a reasonable doubt, that Martha Real took hold of the barrel of the pistol held by defendant, and in the scuffle that then ensued, if any, the pistol was accidentally discharged, and Martha Real thereby wounded, in such event you will find the defendant not guilty." We are of opinion that this, under the circumstances, is a sufficient presentation of the theory of accidental shooting.

Nor do we think that the further contention that the evidence fails to show "a scuffle" is well taken. While, accurately speaking, perhaps, there was not a scuffle, the state's evidence shows that appellant pulled his pistol and presented it at the breast of Martha Real; that she grabbed and pushed it away, and by this means it was discharged. Appellant's statement is, in substance, that he had the pistol out, and that she grabbed it, and it was accidentally discharged. If the scuffle was rather of a slight nature, still the use of the word "scuffle" in this connection is not of sufficient importance, if erroneously used, to require a reversal of the judgment. The jury could not have been misled by the use of this word under the facts, and we would not feel justified in reversing the case for this matter.

Finding no error of sufficient importance to require a reversal of the judgment, it is ordered that it be affirmed.

of counsel to the effect that no such order existed, and that the indictment was in the county court without such order of transfer. It is further agreed that the judgment should be reversed on account of the want of such order of transfer. Under the law, this order of transfer is necessary to show the jurisdiction of the county court attached, and to show authority in the county court to try the case under an indictment, and where there is no order of transfer the conviction cannot be sustained. All the authorities in Texas so hold, and such is the settled law.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

MOODY v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 20, 1909.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 140*)—MOTION TO QUASH—PRESENCE OF UNAUTHORIZED PERSON BEFORE GRAND JURY—BURDEN OF SHOWING.

On a motion to quash, the burden is on accused to show the presence of an unauthorized person before the grand jury, when it was deliberating upon the indictment against him or voting upon it.

2. GRAND JURY (§ 34*)—PRESENCE OF UNAUTHORIZED PERSON DURING DELIBERATION.

The fact that the assistant district attorney was present and examined witnesses in the grand jury room, and consulted with the grand jury regarding the case of accused, is not equivalent to proof that he was present when the grand jury was deliberating upon the indictment against accused, in violation of Code Cr. Proc. 1895, arts. 414, 559.

T. H. Moody was convicted of sodomy, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. S. Anderson and Samuel Belden, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., and C. M. Chambers, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the State.

Before proceeding to trial, appellant, through his counsel, filed a motion to quash the indictment herein, for the reason, in substance, that at the time such grand jury was hearing testimony given by witnesses in said cause against appellant one C. M. Chambers was present with said grand jury, and examined the witnesses against appellant, and advised with and counseled said grand jury in its secret deliberations; that said Chambers was not a member of the grand jury, and was a person not authorized by law to be present with them at said time. The motion also questioned the validity of the appointment of Chambers as assistant district attorney, and averred that there was no provision for the election of such officer by the people, or for his appointment by the Governor. The motion is quite elaborate; but, in the view we take of the case, it has no relevancy to the only matter which can be considered. The court heard evidence on this motion, and it appears from the agreed statement of facts, first, that Chambers had been appointed assistant district attorney by the Governor on March 19, 1909, had given bond as required by law, and that said appointment was made, and said Chambers duly and legally qualified, in accordance with the law enacted by the Thirty-First Legislature, and by virtue of such appointment represented the state, and examined the witnesses in the grand jury room, and consulted with the grand jury regarding the case of T. H. Moody, but was not present at the time the grand jury voted on returning said bill. Articles 414, 415, and 416 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1895, are as follows:

"Art. 414. Attorney Representing the State may Go Before, etc.—The attorney representing the state may go before the grand jury at any time, except when they are discussing the propriety of finding a bill of indictment or voting upon the same.

"Art. 415. Attorney may Examine Witnesses, etc.—The attorney representing the state may examine witnesses before the grand jury, and may advise as to the proper mode of interrogating them, if desired, or if he thinks it necessary.

"Art. 416. Grand Jury may Send for Attorney Representing the State, etc.—When any question arises before a grand jury respecting the proper discharge of their duties, or any matter of law about which they may require advice, it is their right to send for the attorney representing the state and take his advice thereon."

The law makes the following provision with respect to setting aside indictments for causes similar to the motion here. Article 559, Code Cr. Proc. 1895, is as follows:

"A motion to set aside an indictment or information shall be based on one or more of the following causes, and no other: (1) That it appears by the records of the court that the indictment was not found by at least nine grand jurors, or that the information was not presented after oath made as required in article 467. (2) That some person not authorized by law was present when the grand jury were deliberating upon the accusation against the defendant, or were voting upon the same."

The motion was made under the second clause of the above article of our Code of Criminal Procedure, and it is clear that, if in the matters complained of in this section of the article was violated, the indictment must be set aside, and this without reference to the legality of the appointment under which Chambers held the office. He would have no more right to be present in the grand jury room while the grand jury was deliberating upon the accusation against appellant, or were voting on same, if the appointment were valid, than if it were not. The district attorney himself would have no such right; nor would the district judge have such right; nor, indeed, any other person in official or private life. This was thoroughly well settled in the case of Rothschild v. State, 7 Tex. App. 519. In the later case of Stuart v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 440, 34 S. W. 118, it was held that the testimony of the assistant county attorney that he was present in the grand jury room, "that he examined the witnesses for them, and was present with them during their investigations and deliberations on these cases," was sufficient proof to invalidate the indictment, although it was shown that he was not present when they voted on the same. In other words, that unexplained evidence of the presence of the assistant county attorney, there being no explanation of what was meant by "deliberations and investigations," must be held to have meant that he was present when the grand jury was discussing the propriety of finding a bill of indictment, and while they were deliberating upon the accusation against the defendant.

In this case, however, the agreed statement of facts negatives the idea that Chambers was present while the grand jury was voting upon the indictment, or that he was present while they were deliberating upon said matter. It is well settled in this state that the burden rests upon appellant to bring himself within the terms of the statute, and to show a violation of same, before an indictment will be set aside and the defendant discharged. Sims v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 45 S. W. 705. The fact that Chambers was present and examined the witnesses in the grand jury room, and consulted with the grand jury regarding the case, is not equivalent to proof that he was present when the grand jury was deliberating upon the accusation against the appellant. It does not appear in the testimony to what the consultation related. It might easily have been meant to apply to some mere matter of examination of witnesses, procuring additional testimony, postponing the case, or any one of a hundred things that did not touch the deliberations of the grand jury as to the guilt or innocence of the appellant, or as to whether the evidence was sufficient to justify the return of an indictment. Charges such as these must be sustained by the evidence, and in no case should the deliberations of a grand jury be set aside, unless on fair and convincing proof that the facts required to be shown by the law are in evidence. The agreement here does not meet the demands of the law, and the court did not err in overruling the motion.

It becomes unnecessary, therefore, as we believe, to either decide or discuss the matter of the regularity of Chambers' appointment, if, indeed, such question could be raised in this character of proceeding, which we need not decide.

The other grounds relied on for reversal, are, among other things, first, the refusal of the special charge asked by appellant with respect to penetration of the animal mistreated by appellant. The charge of the court sufficiently covers this question. It instructs the jury, in substance, that, if they have a reasonable doubt as to penetration, they would acquit.

The other matter of substance, is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. The character of the charge is almost inconceivably shocking, and yet it was sustained by a witness who testified with the utmost positiveness to every fact essential to a conviction. This evidence was not shaken or disputed, substantially, except by the testimony of appellant himself. There was some testimony of the physician as to the possibility of the offense being committed under the conditions testified to by the witnesses; but we do not deem this so conclusive as to justify us in setting aside the verdict of the jury.

Finding no error in the judgment, it is hereby in all things affirmed.

himself. Held, that where witness and his twin brother were both under arrest, charged with an assault on one S., there being only one blow struck, he was not guilty of contempt in refusing to answer questions asked him by the grand jury as to whether he was in the room when S. was assaulted, whether he assaulted S., and also as to where his brother was at the time, though he did not state that his answers would tend to incriminate him.

Application by Lucian Hughes for writ of habeas corpus. Applicant ordered discharged from custody.

Cooper & Stanford, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Henry S. Bishop, Dist. Atty., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Applicant was adjudged by the district judge guilty of contempt of court for failing to answer certain questions before the grand jury. The agreed statement of facts and the decree of the court adjudicating the facts and reasons for adjudging applicant in contempt are set forth in the record.

The judgment of the court was entered on July 13, 1909, and recites that on a former day of the court, to wit, the day previous, the grand jury came into court, bringing applicant with them, and reported to the court in writing that applicant had been summoned and sworn as a witness, and had refused to testify to certain questions propounded by that body, and asking the court to compel applicant to make answer. The questions are set out as follows: "Were you in the Harrell pool hall, in Amarillo, Potter county, Tex., July 2, 1909, when A. B. Short was assaulted there?" The court informed the witness that he would have to answer; but witness declined to do so, giving as a reason that he was under bond, charged with the same offense as that inquired about in said question. The court considered the matter, and ordered him to answer; otherwise, he would be held in contempt of court. The grand jury and witness retired, and the witness persisted in refusing to testify to the questions. The grand jury again came before the court, bringing applicant with them, and through their foreman presented another report and complaint in writing, informing the court that witness again refused to testify in obedience to the order the court had previously granted, and they reported they had again sworn witness, and asked him in regard to the matter the following certain questions, which are all shown in writing, to wit: "Where were you on the evening of July 2, 1909, about 7 o'clock, when A. B. Short was assaulted in the Harrell pool hall, in Amarillo, Potter county, Tex.?" and "Did you hit or assault the man, A. B. Short?" and "What has Luther Hughes ever told you about the said assault upon A. B. Short?" The witness again declined to answer, for the reason that he was under bond for the same offense inquired about, whereupon the court asked witness in person if he refused to answer said questions. He answered in the affirmative, and, still refusing to testify, he again gave as his reason for so doing that he was under bond for the same offense inquired about in said questions, but did not say that the answers would incriminate him. The court then and there informed appellant, that the grand jury had a right to inquire about these matters, and that the questions were each and all proper questions, and if he refused he would be held in contempt of court and dealt with accordingly. He still refused to testify, or answer the questions, whereupon the court entered his order holding witness in contempt of court, entered a fine, and sent him to jail until he should be willing to testify. The judgment entered fined him $100 for contempt of court and committed him to jail until he testified. Subsequently he informed the court that the answers would incriminate him. It appears from the record that one Short was struck with a billiard cue in the pool hall mentioned, and that applicant and his brother Luther were very much alike in personal appearance, being twin brothers. Both of them were placed under arrest, charged with the offense, applicant's bond being fixed at $500, and he was charged with assault upon A. B. Short by striking him with a billiard cue.

Applicant's contention is that the fine for contempt is illegal, and in violation of the Constitution and laws of this state, which protect him from being forced to give evidence against himself in a case wherein he is prosecuted. We are of opinion this contention is sound. Section 10, art. 1, of the Bill of Rights, and article 4 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1895, provide that an accused party "shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself." The forms of the questions set out in the order adjudicated and entered by the court show the direct question was put to the applicant as to whether or not he struck A. B. Short, and also as to where his brother was at the time. Both of these questions would tend to criminate, or might tend to criminate, applicant, and if he inflicted the blow upon Short would actually do so. Of course, he could not be forced to testify, if he testified to facts that showed his brother was not present, as there was only one blow struck, for this would be equally criminative evidence. After the judgment was entered, it is further shown that applicant conferred with his counsel and assigned the further reason that it would incriminate, or tend to incriminate, him to answer the questions. In stating the matter to the court, without consultation with the attorneys, the applicant stated he was under arrest for the same offense. The two answers are practically the same. Having been charged with the offense inquired about, he was relieved from answering the questions. The court was not justified in fining him for contempt of court in failing or refusing to answer. This question is not a novel one in Texas, and has been before the court several times. Ex parte Park, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 590, 40 S. W. 300, 66 Am. St. Rep. 835; Ex parte Wilson, 30 Tex. Cr. We deem it unnecessary to discuss the matter further, in view of the plain provisions of the Constitution, the statute, and the adjudicated cases construing these provisions of the Bill of Rights and the statute.

It is ordered that applicant be discharged from custody.

RAILEY v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. June 19, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 3, 1909. Second Motion for Rehearing Ordered Filed Nov. 10, 1909, and Mandate Ordered Held Up.)

1. BURGLARY (§ 2*)—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

Pen. Code 1895, art. 838, provides that burglary is constituted by the entrance of a house by force, threats, or fraud, with intent to commit a felony or theft. Article 839 provides that one is guilty of burglary who, with intent to commit a felony or theft, by breaking enters the house in the daytime. Article 841 provides that the entry may consist of the entry of any part of the body, or that the offense may be constituted by the discharge of firearms into the house with the intent to injure the person therein. Held, that article 841 is but an addition to articles 838 and 839, and under the three articles, burglary may consist of entering a house by force, etc., or in entering a house and remaining therein with the intent to commit a felony, or by the discharge of firearms into a house with the intent to injure the person therein, and the intention need not be to commit a felony.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 802*)—DISMISSAL OF PROSECUTION.

It being per se burglary to shoot into a house with the intent to injure any person therein, it is immaterial whether accused, in a prosecution for such an offense, was guilty of assault with intent to murder, and it was not error to permit the prosecuting attorney to dismiss indictments charging accused with assault to commit murder before trying him for the burglary, arising out of the same transaction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 688–697; Dec. Dig. § 302.*]

3. JURY (§ 72*)—COMPLETING PANEL.

Where a regular panel of jurors was tested on their voir dire, only 22 qualified, and the court ordered 25 talesmen to be brought in to complete the list of 24 names from which the parties should select a jury, and 18 of the talesmen qualified, it was not error to refuse to have the names of the 22 jurors of the regular panel, and all of the talesmen who had qualified, placed in the box and drawn therefrom in the regular way, until the panel of 24 was completed, and to grant the request only in so far as securing the names of 2 additional jurors from the list of talesmen, was concerned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 333–347; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

4. WITNESSES (§ 344*)—IMPEACHMENT—ISOLATED INSTANCES OF TEMPER.

In a prosecution for burglary by shooting into a dwelling house, where accused claimed that prosecuting witness had struck accused's wife and called her insulting names, and prosecuting witness testified that he never used violent language towards any one, and that his wife was never violent in language or conduct, evidence, to impeach the prosecuting witness, of a person that he had once gone to prosecuting witness' residence, and that prosecuting witness, without provocation or excuse, had spoken in a loud and angry manner in Mexican, and acted in a violent manner, was inadmissible as evidence merely of previous altercations with other parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1120–1125; Dec. Dig. § 344.*]

5. BURGLARY (§ 39*)—EVIDENCE—REPUTATION.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 841, making it burglary to discharge firearms into a house with intent to injure a person therein, such an act constitutes burglary per se, and in a prosecution therefor, evidence of the general bad reputation of the alleged injured person for peace and quiet in the community, going merely to corroborate testimony that he had assaulted accused's wife, and tending to show that the shooting was only an aggravated assault, and not an assault with intent to murder, was properly excluded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for burglary, where accused introduced indictments against him charging assaults with gun on prosecuting witness and on prosecuting witness' wife, and also motions of the district attorney to nol. pros. them, error, if any, in permitting the district attorney to testify that his reasons for dismissing the indictments were that in his judgment the same facts were the basis of prosecution under those indictments that were the basis of the present prosecution, and that the state could not carve two convictions out of the same facts, was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 869*)—EVIDENCE—NOLLE PROSEQUI—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Motions of a district attorney to dismiss indictments are addressed to the discretion of the court, with which the jury has nothing to do, and hence in a burglary case, evidence of other indictments against the accused for assault with intent to murder, growing out of the same transaction, and that they had been dismissed, was improperly admitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 869.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 448*)—EVIDENCE—OPINIONS.

In a prosecution for burglary by shooting into a house with intent to injure a person therein, prosecuting witness testified that just prior to the offense, he had had an altercation with accused's wife, in which she was the aggressor, which she denied on the stand. A witness for the state on cross-examination testified that he witnessed the occurrence, and that he did not see a certain witness of accused present, a boy eight years old, who had testified that he was present and had heard prosecuting witness call accused's wife certain insulting names and had seen him slap her, etc. Held, that it was not error to exclude a question whether, if the boy said he was there, witness would dispute it, as it called for the witness' opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 448.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1167*)—APPEAL—CURE OF ERROR—ADMITTING ONE COUNT OF INDICTMENT.

Action of the court in submitting only the first count of an indictment cured any error it committed in refusing to sustain a motion to require the state to elect which count would be relied on.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3101–3106; Dec. Dig. § 1167.*]

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 730*)—IMPROPER ARGUMENT—ACTION OF COURT.

Error in the argument of state's counsel that accused had interposed technical objections which prevented the state from proving certain facts was cured where, after objection by accused thereto, the court instructed the jury not to consider the argument, and at the conclusion thereof gave a special charge again instructing them to the same effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 730*)—APPEAL—CURE OF ERROR—IMPROPER ARGUMENT.

Error in argument of a district attorney, who stated, "Let us now get rid of slop that is always injected in a criminal trial by the defendant," was cured where, after objection by accused, the court charged the jury not to consider the argument, and at the conclusion thereof, at accused's request, gave a special charge to the same effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

12. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 726*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—IMPROPER ARGUMENT.

Accused's counsel, in his argument, after stating that children are usually truthful, stated that the Savior had said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." In reply, state's counsel used this language: "The Gentleman who uttered the expression, 'Suffer little children to come unto me for of such is the kingdom of Heaven,' lived nearly 2,000 years ago, and did not know of the juvenile laws and courts of Texas, and of the small boys who have been juveniled under that law." Held, that the state's counsel's retort did not constitute error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 726.*]

13. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 857*)—TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF JURY—RECEIVING ADDITIONAL EVIDENCE.

Receiving, by the jury, of additional evidence other than that introduced on the trial, if it injuriously affects, or could injuriously affect, accused's rights, is ground for reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2054, 2055; Dec. Dig. § 857.*]

14. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 862*)—MISCONDUCT OF JURY.

In a prosecution for burglary, by shooting into a house with intent to injure a person therein, where the state's theory was that accused fired on account of indignities offered his wife, and accused claimed that when he reached the window, the injured person attempted to shoot him with a pistol or gun, and that he fired for self-preservation, evidence that one of the jurors who had been on the building when it was constructed, and had some personal knowledge of its location, drew a diagram, which the jury substituted for two diagrams introduced in evidence, of the interior of the room in which the injured person was when the shot was fired was not ground for reversal.

Appeal from Criminal District Court, Harris County; E. R. Campbell, Judge.

T. L. Railey was convicted of burglary, and appeals. Affirmed.

Brockman, Kahn & Williams, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of burglary, and his punishment assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary.

The indictment contains two counts. The first charges burglary by shooting a gun into the dwelling house of Charles Schmidt, with intent to injure Charles Schmidt; and the second count charges burglary in that said appellant did break and enter with intent to commit a felony, in this: That he, the said T. L. Railey, did then and there discharge firearms, to wit, a gun, into the said dwelling house of the said Charles Schmidt, with the intent then and thereby to unlawfully kill and murder the said Charles Schmidt. The court submitted alone the first count in the indictment.

Bill of exceptions No. 1 complains that before this cause was called for trial, cause No. 15,548 being upon call, the district attorney filed his nolle prosequi dismissing cause No. 15,548 pending in said court, wherein this defendant was charged with assault with a gun upon Charles Schmidt, the alleged injured party in this case, with the alleged intent to murder the said Charles Schmidt, alleged to have occurred on the 30th day of April, 1908, in Harris county, Tex., and which cause was based upon the same identical facts as are the basis of this transaction, to wit, the shooting into the house of the alleged injured party, Charles Schmidt, and to which motion, to nol. pros. by the district attorney defendant objected on the ground that said cause No. 15,548, being based upon the same identical facts and the same identical transaction upon which the indictment in this cause was based, it was important to a fair judicial determination of the charge in this case that said cause No. 15,548 be first tried; that the issue of whether or not defendant, if guilty, was guilty of assault to murder, or of aggravated assault, or not guilty, be determined, that he might be able to present to the court such pleas of former jeopardy or former acquittal as might arise from the verdict of the jury under a prosecution of said cause No. 15,548, because the offense of burglary by the law of this state, as defined by articles 838 and 841 of the Penal Code of 1895, could only be constituted by an unlawful entry with the intent to commit theft or a felony; and, should the jury in said cause No. 15,548 find defendant guilty of aggravated assault under the facts in evidence in this case, and it is here stated as a fact that defendant then and there claimed that the facts which would be adduced on the trial on behalf of defendant would show that, immediately prior to the shooting, the alleged injured party, Charles Schmidt, slapped the wife of defendant in the face in view of defendant, defendant being at that time 200 or 300 feet distant, and also called defendant's wife vile names, which insulting conduct as to said names was made known to defendant as soon as he reached the place where his wife was, he having immediately, upon seeing said Schmidt slap his wife, gone hastily towards where his wife and said Schmidt were, and on his approach said Schmidt went into his own house, followed by his own wife, and upon defendant getting to where his (defendant's) wife was, she stated to him that said Schmidt, in addition to striking her, had called her "a bitch" and "a whore," and had used other insulting language to and towards her, and that defendant was greatly outraged by said matters, and immediately went into his own house, which was within a few feet of where said assault occurred, and got his shotgun, and went upon the premises of the said Schmidt, and called to him from the gate to come out of the house, that he wanted to see him, and, hearing no response, went through the gate to the immediate yard surrounding the house of said Schmidt, and towards the door of the said house, and had passed beyond a certain window going towards said door when he heard the voice of said Schmidt in said house at about said window, and turning and stepping back to a point opposite said window, saw said Schmidt, and called to him to come out of the house, that he wanted to see him, and said Schmidt then made a demonstration to reach for a pistol, according to the testimony of defendant, which defendant testified he saw lying on the table near said Schmidt, and that defendant called to him to stop, and, said Schmidt not stopping, defendant fired one barrel of his double-barreled shotgun, which was loaded with small shot, at said Schmidt, the other barrel being loaded but not discharged, and defendant stating that the reason he did not fire said other barrel, which there was nothing to prevent him from doing, was that he saw, after he had fired the first barrel, that said Schmidt did not appear to intend to make any further attempt to injure him (defendant) then; that the shooting into said house could not amount to a felony, and therefore could not constitute such an entry as would go to constitute the act of burglary under the law as defined in said articles 838 and 841 of the Penal Code of 1895, and that it was necessary to try cause No. 15,548 first in order to ascertain the above facts. As appellant insists, article 838 of the Penal Code of 1895 provides that burglary is constituted by the entrance of a house by force, threats, or fraud, with intent to commit a felony or the crime of theft. Article 839 of the Penal Code of 1895, provides that he is also guilty of burglary who, with intent to commit a felony or theft by breaking, enters the house in the daytime. Article 840 of the Penal Code of 1895 provides that it is not necessary that there should be an actual breaking to constitute the offense of burglary, except when the entry is made in the daytime. Article 841 provides the entry is not confined to the entrance of the whole body. It may consist of the entry of any part for the purpose of committing a felony, or it may be constituted by the discharge of firearms or other deadly missiles into the house with the intent to injure the person therein. Appellant contends that article 841 does not define a separate and distinct offense, but is explanatory of articles 839 and 840, and that there cannot be burglary unless the intent is to commit a felony or the crime of theft, and therefore, to discharge firearms into the house with intent to injure, an intent to injure not necessarily being a felony, that it would not be burglary, unless there was a felonious purpose.

In the case of Garner v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 22, 19 S. W. 333, we used this language: "Article 707 of our Penal Code (the old number which corresponds with article 841 of the present Code) defining what constitutes an entry in burglary, declares that 'it may be constituted by the discharge of firearms or other deadly missile into the house, with intent to injure any person therein.' Under this provision of the statute, to discharge firearms into a house with intent to injure any person therein is per se burglary, and constitutes all the force and entry that is necessary and essential to that crime. Our conclusion is that the indictment in this case is not defective, for the reason stated by appellant's counsel in his motion to quash; and we are further of opinion that it sufficiently charges a burglary by the discharge of firearms into a house with intent to injure the persons therein. The indictment is in substantially the same language as that used for a similar offense in the case of Searcy v. State, 1 Tex. App. 440, and which indictment was pronounced to be good by the opinion of the court in that case." We hold that article 841 is but an addition to articles 838 and 839, and that the true construction to be placed upon it would be to make article 838 read as follows: The offense of burglary is constituted by entering a house by force, threats or fraud at night, or in a like manner entering a house and remaining concealed therein with the intent in either case to commit a felony or the crime of theft, or it may be constituted by the discharge of firearms or other deadly missile into a house with intent to injure the person therein. The Code itself provides that same must be construed as one harmonious whole, and each provision thereof given validity and force without regard to the distinction that existed at common law between the construction of civil and criminal statutes. In the light of this rule of construction, both statutory and common law, we hold that it would be a strained construction to hold that the intent to injure must be a felony, since this would destroy the liberal wording and evident intent of the law. Article 838 says if one enters a house with intent to commit a felony, he is guilty, and then article 841, which makes it a burglary to shoot firearms into a building with intent to injure an occupant of the building, clearly was designed and intended to set up the offense or mode and method of committing the crime of burglary.

In the case of Hammons v. State, 29 Tex. App. 445, 16 S. W. 99, a converse rule appears to have been laid down to that here announced, but a careful reading of said last-cited decision would show that it was only articles 838 and 839 there under consideration, and not article 841, and any expressions in said opinion to the contrary clearly appear to be dicta. So, reverting to the action of the district attorney, complained of in the above bill of exceptions, we say the court did not err in permitting the dismissal of the assault with intent to murder case, since the state can carve, in drawing its indictments, any offense defined by the statute out of any given state of facts, dismiss either one of the indictments, and try for the other. Certainly, if it is per se burglary to shoot into a house with intent to injure any person therein, it would become utterly immaterial whether appellant was guilty of murder or assault. In other words, being per se burglary to shoot into a house with intent to injure an occupant thereof, it becomes immaterial whether the party had a felonious purpose or not, and if appellant, being apprised of the insults and indignities offered his wife, shot at the prosecuting witness upon first meeting, and the same should only be aggravated or simple assault, waiving the burglary feature, still these facts would become immaterial if he intended to injure the party in the house. The object and purpose of article 841 of the Penal Code of 1895 was to protect the sanctity of the home, and to punish the ruthless shooting into same by any one where the purpose of so doing was to injure an occupant of said home or house. It follows, therefore, the court did not err, from any standpoint, in permitting the district attorney to dismiss the indictment above discussed.

Bill of exceptions No. 2 complains of the same matter, in substance, discussed in bill No. 1.

Bill of exceptions No. 3 complains that the regular panel of jurors for the week having been tested on their voir dire as to their qualifications, and only 22 having qualified, the court ordered 25 talesmen to be brought in to be tested on their voir dire, out of which to complete the list of 24 names, from which list the parties should select a jury, and, 13 of said talesmen jurors having qualified, defendant then requested the court to have the names of said 22 jurors of the regular panel, and all of said talesmen who had qualified, placed in the box and shaken up and drawn from the box in the regular way, until a panel of 24 was completed, which request the court refused to grant as to the said 22 regular jurors, but did grant said request in so far as securing the names of two additional jurors from said list of talesmen was concerned. There was no error in the ruling of the court.

Bill of exceptions No. 6 complains that defendant having called Frank Frost, who was duly sworn as a witness in his behalf, and who testified that he knew the complaining witness, Charles Schmidt, and his wife, and that he (witness) on a certain occasion, when said Schmidt had taken up the horse of the witness, went to the place of residence of the said Schmidt, and that said Schmidt, without provocation or excuse, spoke in a loud and angry manner to him, but spoke in Mexican, and that he could not understand that language, but the conduct of the said Schmidt was violent, which testimony, after it was given, was, upon motion of the state, stricken out, over the objection of defendant made at the time; and appellant further offered to prove by said witness the above said facts to which he had testified, and further that the wife of said Schmidt at said time, and in the same connection, attempted to strike the witness, which was also without provocation or excuse, and which testimony the witness would have given had he been permitted, and which testimony was then and there stated to be offered in contradiction of the statement of the said Schmidt that he was not a man that ever got mad as claimed by defendant in this case, and that he never used violent or profane or indecent language, or conduct, to or towards any one, and that his wife was never violent in language or conduct, and as an impeachment of said Schmidt and his wife as witnesses in this case, and as shedding light upon the probable conduct of said Schmidt and his said wife at the time said Schmidt assaulted the wife of defendant as claimed by defendant and his wife, and his (defendant's) witness Willie Schubert. We do not think this testimony was admissible. Previous altercations with other and different parties could not throw any light on this question. If appellant had laid a predicate to impeach said prosecuting witness Schmidt, asking said Schmidt if he had not had a difficulty with the witness, then said witness could have been introduced to impeach said Schmidt on said question, but isolated instances of temper or quarrels is not a compliance with the rules of evidence to prove reputation.

Bill of exceptions No. 7 shows the defense introduced three witnesses, each of whom testified to the general bad reputation of the alleged injured party, Charles Schmidt, for peace and quiet in the community in which he resides, and defendant then offered to further prove by each and all of said witnesses that they were acquainted with said Schmidt's habits and disposition and his general reputation as to using violent, profane, and indecent language and conduct to and towards others, and specially when he was angered at any one, and it was at the time stated to the court to be offered in connection with the general bad reputation of said Schmidt for peace and quiet, as bearing on the general issue of the conduct of the said Schmidt to the wife of defendant at the time of the alleged assault of said Schmidt on the wife of defendant, and the alleged use by said Schmidt to the wife of defendant of vile and insulting language, just a few moments before the shooting occurred, and as bearing on the probable conduct of said Schmidt at the time of the alleged shooting of said Schmidt by defendant. Under the facts of this case we do not think this testimony is material, since, as stated above, the testimony could only go to corroborate the fact that the prosecuting witness had assaulted appellant's wife; and, it being burglary per se to shoot into a house to injure the prosecuting witness, then the testimony becomes immaterial, since it could only serve to corroborate appellant's theory that the assault was an aggravated assault, and not an assault with intent to murder; and under the statute above discussed, it being immaterial whether it was an assault to murder or aggravated assault, then it follows that the testimony was immaterial.

Bill of exceptions No. 8 complains practically of the same error of the court in refusing to admit reputation of the prosecuting witness as discussed in the above bill.

Bill of exceptions No. 11 shows that W. G. Love, district attorney, being on the stand as a witness in behalf of the state, in the state's rebutting testimony was permitted to state and testify to the jury that his reasons for dismissing the indictments in cause No. 15,548 and cause No. 15,549, the first alleging an assault by defendant with a gun upon the alleged injured party, Charles Schmidt, and the second charging such an assault with said same intent upon Mrs. Charles Schmidt, and both of which were based on the shooting which is the basis of this prosecution, was because in his judgment the same facts were the basis of said prosecution that are the basis of this prosecution, and that the state could not carve "two convictions" out of the same facts, and that for that reason he nolle pros'd said indictments, and elected to try defendant upon the indictment in this cause, to which testimony when offered, and before it was given, defendant objected on the ground that same was the opinion of said witness, and was admitting said opinion of said witness before the jury as evidence, that in his judgment and opinion the defendant was guilty in this case, and that when the jury had convicted defendant in this case, according to said opinion of said witness that the state could not then carve "another conviction" out of the same facts, and that the same was not the statement of any facts, and that the nolle prosequi entered in said causes stated the reasons for their being entered, and that the said opinion of said witness was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent as evidence to prove any fact or issue in this case. The court overruled the objections, and witness was permitted to testify as above detailed. This bill is allowed with the following qualification: "The indictment in causes Nos. 15,548 and 15,549 referred to, together with the motions of district attorney to nol. pros. the same, had been admitted in evidence on behalf of the defendant over the objection of the state, and the testimony above objected to was admitted on behalf of the state to explain to the jury why said cases had been nol. pros'd by the district attorney." Certainly, in the light of the court's explanation, if error at all, the testimony of the district attorney was harmless. The defense had insisted upon introducing the indictments charging appellant with assault with intent to murder upon prosecuting witness, Schmidt, and his wife, and the reasons of the district attorney for nol. pros'ing same, and it could do no harm to amplify the reasons for nol. pros'ing the indictments. None of the testimony, however, ought to have gone before the jury. It is a matter addressed to the discretion of the court, and with which the jury had nothing on earth to do, but certainly appellant cannot complain, after the indictments were introduced and the reasons for nol. pros'ing also introduced, that the district attorney explained to the jury.

Bill of exceptions No. 12 shows that the state's witness Jack Hagerman, being on the stand for the state in its rebutting testimony, and being on cross-examination, the said witness having testified on the day of the occurrence alleged in the indictment in this cause he went to the place known as the "Jones' place," which was in sight of what occurred between the state's witness Charles Schmidt and defendant's wife, which immediately preceded the shooting, and that he saw defendant's wife at her buggy and apparently unhitching her horse, and saw her grab her buggy whip out of her buggy and go to the fence and put her foot on the first board of the fence as if she was going to get over with the whip in her hand, but that he would not say that she was unhitching the horse, or what occurred prior to that time, and the state's witness, Charles Schmidt, having testified that defendant's wife slapped at him three times across the fence and that he jumped back each time, and that she then ran to her buggy and grabbed the whip and came back to the fence with it, and defendant's wife having testified that said Schmidt slapped her at the fence, and then started as if to get over the fence, and that she then went to the buggy and got her whip with the intention of defending herself as best she could against said Schmidt should he cross the fence to continue his assault on her; and the witness further testified that he did not see defendant's witness Willie Schubert, a small boy about eight years old, who had testified that he was present, and had gone to where Mrs. Railey was to take her some meat that had been left by a butcher at his mother's for Mrs. Railey in the absence of Mrs. Railey, and that he heard said Schmidt call Mrs. Railey "a bitch" and "a whore" and some other ugly names, and saw him slap her, and that he then left and went to his home, his mother living upstairs over said "Jones' place," and defendant then asked said witness Hagerman, the following question: "If that little boy says he was out there, you wouldn't undertake to dispute that he was not, would you?" and to which question the witness would have answered, had he been permitted to do so, that if the little boy said he was there, he would not dispute it, and which was at the time stated by defendant to be offered for the purpose of testing the extent to which the witness would assert that the little boy was not present at the time of the alleged assault upon, and insulting conduct towards, defendant's wife by the state's witness, Charles Schmidt. This testimony was utterly inadmissible. It called for an opinion of the witness. The court approves the bill, however, by stating, that the state also objected to the form of the question as being improper, and the court only sustained the objections as to the form of the question, and stated to counsel for defendant at the time that he might ask the witness any question, or questions, which would elicit the fact of whether or not said boy, Willie Schubert, was present at said time and place, or whether the witness saw said boy, and thereafter counsel for defendant did propound proper questions to said witness, which elicited the following testimony from him: "I will not undertake to say that he was not there [referring to said boy, Willie Schubert]. I will not do that now; I say that I did not see him there."

Bill of exceptions No. 13 complains the court erred in refusing to sustain a motion of appellant to require the state to elect which count in the indictment would be relied upon for a conviction. The court merely submitted the first count in the indictment. This cured surely any error in the ruling of the court.

Bill of exceptions No. 14 complains that the state argued to the jury as follows: "The defendant interposes technical objections, and in that way prevents the state from proving certain facts." This bill is allowed with this explanation: "After the objection by defendant to the language used as set out above, the court instructed the jury not to consider said argument, and at the conclusion of the argument, at defendant's request, gave to the jury defendant's special instruction No. 1, again instructing them that they should not consider said language." The explanation cured any possible error in the argument. Bill No. 15 complains, in substance, to same facts as those stated in bill No. 14.

Bill of exceptions No. 16 complains, in substance, of the following statement in the closing argument by the state: "Let us now get rid of slop that is always injected in a criminal trial by the defendant." The explanation to this bill says that after the objection of defendant to the language used, as above set out, the court instructed the jury not to consider said argument, and at the conclusion of the argument, and at defendant's request, gave to the jury defendant's special instruction No. 3, again instructing them that they should not consider said language. This bill and bill No. 17 complain practically of the same matter. In the light of the explanation of the court none of this argument was prejudicial to appellant.

Bill of exceptions No. 19 shows that defendant's counsel, in course of his argument, after stating that children are usually truthful, stated that the Savior had said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." In reply to this, state's counsel used this language: "The Gentleman who uttered the expression, 'Suffer little children to come unto me for of such is the kingdom of Heaven,' lived nearly 2,000 years ago, and did not know of the juvenile laws and courts of Texas, and of the small boys who have been juvenlled under that law." Waiving the sacrilege of the suggestion of the state's counsel, we do not think there was any error in the retort made upon appellant's argument.

Bill of exceptions No. 21 complains of the misconduct of the jury who, after they retired to consider their verdict, received other evidence in the absence of defendant, of a material character, other than that adduced upon the trial of this cause, in this, to wit: That one or more of said jurors whose name or names defendant is unable to now give, drew a diagram of his or their own, which was substituted for the two diagrams introduced in evidence of the interior of the room in which the said Schmidt was at the time the shot was fired; one of said substituted diagrams having been drawn by the said Schmidt, and the other by the state's witness J. A. Voss. We have carefully reviewed the matter complained of in this bill, and think that the mere fact that one of the jurors had been on the building when it was constructed, and had some personal knowledge of its location, did not and could not have injured appellant for him to state the knowledge that he had of the location of the building, in the light of this record, since appellant says when he reached the window that the injured party attempted to shoot him with a pistol or gun, and a pistol is frequently called a gun, and that he fired for self-preservation. The state's case is that he fired on account of the indignities offered appellant's wife. So we see nothing in the plat suggested by the jury that could injure in the remotest appellant's rights. Of course the question is well settled that additional evidence that injuriously affects, or could injuriously affect, the rights of a defendant is a proper ground to reverse a case. One or more maps were introduced. The bill presenting this matter is too long and voluminous to copy in this opinion. Suffice it to say that there was no error prejudicial to appellant. Furthermore, the bill presenting the matter does not appear to be signed by the judge.

The charge of the court in all respects properly presents the law of this case, and presents the doctrine of reasonable appearances of danger, as well as actual danger from the defendant's standpoint, authorizing the jury to resolve each reasonable doubt in behalf of the appellant. We have carefully reviewed seriatim all of appellant's contentions, and do not believe there is any error in this record authorizing a reversal of the judgment, and same is in all things affirmed.

GILBERT v. STATE.

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1173*) — APPEAL — INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the evidence on a trial for burglary shows that the freight cars entered were at the same place and the entry made at the same time, the failure in the charge to limit the evidence that other cars had been entered than the one as to which the state elected to prosecute to the showing of intent could not have injured accused.

2. BURGLARY (§ 46*)—CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1144*) —TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

It was unnecessary for the instructions to give the number of the freight car alleged to have been burglarized, where the state had elected to prosecute for a car named; but it must be assumed, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that that fact was stated to the jury, and that they understood that they were limited to the particular car as to which the state elected to prosecute.

Appeal from Criminal District Court, Dallas County; W. W. Nelms, Judge.

John Gilbert was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Horace Williams and W. J. Wasson, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. This appeal is prosecuted from a judgment of conviction had in the district court of Dallas county, Tex., on November 8, 1908, convicting appellant of the crime of burglary of a railroad car, and assessing his punishment at confinement for three years.

A number of questions are raised in the record, but most of them are conceded, with admirable candor, by appellant, to be without merit. It is claimed, however, that the court erred in failing in the charge to limit the effect of the evidence that other railroad cars were broken and entered at the same time and place when the car in question was broken and entered; and again that in this case there was a general charge in the indictment of the burglary of a railroad car, and the evidence developed the burglary or entry at least of five cars at the same time and place, and the court required the state to elect upon which car it was relying for a conviction, and the state having elected, as shown by an order made in the case, to prosecute for the burglary of car C., M. & St. P. No. 82076, the court should in terms have confined the attention of the jury to that particular car in the charge. Again, it is complained that the testimony in the case rests upon direct evidence, and, the court having given a charge on circumstantial evidence, that this was confusing and misleading, in that it tended to draw the consideration of the jury away from the question of the accuracy of vision of the witness, in what counsel denominate "the remarkable identification," to the question of the effect of defendant's presence in the car.

The evidence in the case briefly shows that a number of freight cars, all sealed, left the city of Dallas in a train on the Cotton Belt road about 7 o'clock p. m. of the night in question, and that they arrived at Noel about 8 o'clock the same evening, and were placed on the side track. The evidence also indicates that at the same time and place five of these cars, including car C., M. & St. P. No. 82076, were entered. Appellant was seen by more than one person about the car, and was identified by at least one witness positively as having been in the car when the parties appeared on the scene. He jumped out, and was later captured, lying flat on the ground near by; and while being conveyed to the jail he escaped, and was soon thereafter arrested. The evidence does not distinctly show that these cars were coupled together at the time, but it does show that they were at the same place; that the entry was made at the same time, for the reason that the

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes had been made very soon after they arrived at Noel. So it is seen that the entry of the cars was made while under the dominion and control of the station agent at Noel, and practically at the same time and place, so as to constitute, as we believe, one and the same transaction. Indeed, we think it was literally, in a legal sense, the same burglary, and but one offense, and the conviction under which appellant rests here would bar further prosecution. Wright v. State, 17 Tex. App. 152; Adams v. State, 16 Tex. App. 162; Hirshfield v. State, 11 Tex. App. 207.

We recognize the rule laid down by this court in many cases, and among others those cited by appellant (Scott v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 68 S. W. 680; Long v. State, 11 Tex. App. 381; Carter v. State, 23 Tex. App. 508, 5 S. W. 129; Wheeler v. State, 23 Tex. App. 598, 5 S. W. 160; Mayfield v. State, 23 Tex. App. 645, 5 S. W. 161; Cravey v. State, 23 Tex. App. 677, 5 S. W. 162; Barnes v. State, 28 Tex. App. 29, 11 S. W. 679; Hanley v. State, 28 Tex. App. 375, 13 S. W. 142, and numerous other cases), that where cotemporaneous crimes are admitted in evidence under circumstances justifying their admission, the court should ordinarily limit the effect of such testimony for the purposes of showing intent, motive, system, or other like purposes. However, it has been held in very many cases that it is only necessary for the court to charge upon and limit the evidence showing other extraneous crimes, when there is danger of conviction for the offenses not charged, or where there might be an unwarranted use of such testimony, to the prejudice of the defendant in the case in which he is being tried. Here, as we think, the crime being single and of the same character of moral turpitude, the entries being of cars in possession of the same person, and, therefore, of the same ownership in the legal sense, that the failure to limit this testimony could not, in the nature of things have injured appellant. Again, we think it was unnecessary for the charge of the court to name the particular number of the car alleged to have been entered. When, as in this case, there had been an election to prosecute for the burglary of the car named, it must, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be assumed that this fact was stated to the jury, and that they would have understood that they were limited in their evidence to the particular car upon which the state elects to prosecute.

In respect to the charge of the court on circumstantial evidence, there was a state of case, we believe, under which the jury would have been justified in convicting appellant, even if they should not have believed the testimony of the witness who claimed to have seen him actually in the car. While a charge on circumstantial evidence was not, as we the contrary was rather favorable to him than otherwise. The evidence of appellant's guilt is conclusive, nor do we believe that, fairly considered, there is any error in the record which would justify or require us to reverse the case.

The judgment of the court below is therefore affirmed.

BROOKS, J., absent.

TEXAS & P. RY. CO. v. HENSON et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. June 19, 1909. Rehearing Denied Oct. 6, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 4*) — ACTIONS — VENUE—WHO ARE CARRIERS—BELT LINE RAILROAD—"COMMON CARRIER."

A belt line railway company, chartered as a railroad company, owning four or five locomotives and one flat car and about 14 or 15 miles of track, which makes connection with various railroad companies, and switches cars for these companies to stockyards and other railroad connections, but which has no depot or loading facilities, furnishes no cars, makes no charges to shippers or contract with them, and is paid for its services by the railroad companies, is not a "common carrier" within the meaning of Acts 1905, p. 29, c. 25, § 1, providing that any common carrier doing business as such in the state may be sued for any cause arising out of transportation in any court of competent jurisdiction in any county in which such carrier does business, or has an agent or representative.

2. PARTIES (§ 51*)—ADDITIONAL PARTIES.

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1208, providing that before a case is called for trial additional parties may, when they are necessary or proper parties to the suit, be brought in, does not authorize the bringing in of a party defendant, unless such party was properly suable in the county where such suit is pending.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 251*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a railway company for damages from negligence in handling a shipment of cattle, it was not error to refuse defendant's instruction submitting the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence in failing to feed and water the stock before shipment, where there is no plea of such contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 587–595; Dec. Dig. § 251.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 215*) — CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK—FACILITIES—STOCK PENS.

It is the duty of a railway company to furnish sufficient suitable pens and facilities at its terminus for delivering cattle shipped over its line, and the crowded condition of the stockyards at its terminus will not relieve it from liability for damages from negligence in handling a shipment of cattle.

5. Evidence (§ 497*)—Opinion Evidence—Mixed Question of Law and Fact.

In an action against a carrier for damages to a shipment of cattle, caused by negligence of the carrier, evidence by plaintiff that the loss in price per head on his cattle was $2 or $2.50 was not a violation of the rule that a witness cannot express an opinion upon a mixed question of law and fact.

Appeal from District Court, Midland County; Jas. L. Shepherd, Judge.

Action by R. N. Henson and others against the Texas & Pacific Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Ed W. Smith, for appellant. Caldwell & Whittaker and Capps, Cantey, Hanger & Short, for appellees.

SPEER, J. R. N. Henson sued the Texas & Pacific Railway Company to recover $1,975 damages for negligence in handling a shipment of cattle from Stanton to North Ft. Worth. The defendant answered, and impleaded the Ft. Worth Belt Railway Company. This latter company, after being cited, filed its plea of privilege to be sued in Tarrant county, the county of its domicile, which plea was heard on its merits and sustained by the court. There was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff against the Texas & Pacific Railway Company for $1,800, and that company has appealed.

Whether or not the court erred in sustaining appellee Ft. Worth Belt Railway Company's plea of privilege depends upon the proper construction of Acts 1905, p. 29, c. 25, prescribing parties to and venue of suits against railroad corporations. Section 1 of that act is as follows: "That whenever any passenger, freight, baggage or other property has been transported by two or more railroad companies, express companies, steamship or steamboat companies, transportation companies or common carriers of any kind or name whatsoever, or by any assignee, lessee, trustee or receiver thereof, or partly by one or more such companies, or common carriers, and partly by one or more assignee, lessee, trustee or receiver thereof operating or doing business as such common carriers in this state, or having an agent or representative in this state, suit for damage or loss or for any other cause of action arising out of such carriage, transportation or contract in relation thereto may be brought against any one or all of such common carriers, assignees, lessees, trustees or receivers so operating or doing business in this state, or having an agent or representative in this state, in any court of competent jurisdiction in any county in which either of such common carriers, assignees, lessees, trustees or receivers operates or does business, or has an agent or representative; provided, however, that if damages be recovered in such suits against more than one defendant, not partners in such carriage, transportation or contract, the same shall on request of either party be apportioned between the defendants, by the verdict of the jury, or if no jury is demanded, then by the judgment of the court." From a reading of this article it is apparent that the Legislature intended it should be effective as to those transportation companies operating as common carriers, and unless appellee the Ft. Worth Belt Railway Company is a common carrier under the general acceptation of that term, then there is no authority in law for holding it in the present suit to answer in a county other than that of its domicile. The facts show that while this company is chartered as a railroad company, yet its business is not that of the ordinary railroad corporation. It owns four or five locomotives, and one flat car, about 14 or 15 miles of track near the city of Ft. Worth, making connection with various railroad companies, and is engaged in the business of switching or transferring cars for these railroad companies from their various connections with its line to the Ft. Worth stockyards and to other railroad connections. It has no depot or loading facilities, furnishes no cars, makes no charges against shippers—in fact is a stranger to the shipping contract entered into by the various railroad companies—but its compensation consists in fixed charges of from $1 to $2 per car for handling such cars, which charges, under the rule promulgated by the Railroad Commission, are required to be absorbed by the railroad company engaging its services. Under these circumstances we hold that the Belt Railway Company is not a common carrier within the meaning of the act above quoted, but that the same was merely the agent of the appellant, employed by it as a means of carrying out the contract of shipment with appellee Henson, and as such was properly dismissed from the suit in Midland county. Tex. & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Scoggin & Brown, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 526, 90 S. W. 521. While there may be some contrariety of holding on this question, still we think the weight of authority, as well as the better reason, is in favor of the conclusion we have here reached.

In Elliott on Railroads, paragraph 1399, it is said: "If the transfer company simply acts as an agent of the initial carrier in transferring the goods, then the transfer company cannot be justly regarded as a connecting carrier, nor can it be so considered where the initial carrier simply employs it for its own convenience. Ordinarily the question whether the transfer company was or was not an agent or employé of the initial carrier must be determined from the facts of the particular case." So in Moore on Carriers, § 43, it is said: "But a corporation which, being under no legal obligation to do so, voluntarily contracts to switch cars over its tracks between two or more railways, for which service it collects a certain switching charge for switching the cars, loaded or empty, but charges no traffic rates on the freight transported or transferred in the cars in the performance of such service, assumes none of the responsibilities of a common carrier, but only those of a switchman." The text of these two writers appears to be based upon, and is supported by, the case of Ky. & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (C. C.) 37 Fed. 567, 2 L. R. A. 289, 2 Interst. Com. R. 351. Article 1208, Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, authorizing the making of additional parties, is also cited by appellant, but this statute will not authorize the making of a party defendant, unless such party was properly suable in the first place in the county where such suit is pending. St. L. S. W. Ry. Co. v. McKnight, 99 Tex. 289, 89 S. W. 755. It is hardly necessary for us to add that we are not discussing the question of Ft. Worth Belt Railway Company's liability for any act of negligence, but merely its right to be sued in the county of its domicile as affected by the statutes referred to.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

In the trial of the case on its merits there was no error in refusing appellant's special charge No. 4, seeking to have submitted the issue of appellees' contributory negligence in failing to feed and water the stock while in the pens at Stanton, since there was no plea of contributory negligence in this respect.

Appellant fails to state any evidence that would authorize the giving of special charge No. 1, excluding a recovery for delays occurring prior to the delivery of the cattle in question to it, and indeed our examination of the record fails to discover any evidence tending to show much damages.

It was the duty of appellant to furnish suitable pens and facilities for delivering cattle at its Ft. Worth termination, and the requested special charge No. 8, excusing it for all damages growing out of a crowded condition of the stockyards, was therefore erroneous in assuming that it was not liable for such crowded condition.

It was permissible, we think, to allow appellee Henson as a witness to state that the loss in price per head on his cattle at their destination was $2 or $2.50, and such ruling did not violate the principle that a witness cannot express an opinion upon a mixed question of law and fact. Waggoner National Bank, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 293, 81 S. W. 1050. The authorities cited by appellant, notably H. & T. C. R. R. Co. v. Roberts (Tex.) 108 S. W. 808, Id. (Tex. Civ. App.) 109 S. W. 982, and G., C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Kimble (Tex. Civ. App.) 109 S. W. 234, are not in point, since there the testimony condemned consisted in the expression of opinion by witnesses as to what would constitute "a reasonable time" or "reasonable care," and the like—evidently mixed questions of law and fact.

Other assignments of error not discussed are disposed of in our conclusions with respect to appellee Ft. Worth Belt Railway Company's connection with the shipment.

We find no error in the judgment, and it is affirmed.

SAMPLES v. WEVER.†

1. TRIAL (§ 343*)—VERDICT—CONSTRUCTION—AIDER BY PETITION.

The petition may be looked to to aid in construing the verdict.

2. TRIAL (§ 333*)—VERDICT—SUFFICIENCY.

Where, in an action on a note and to foreclose a vendor's lien, the petition set forth the note, with date, principal amount, rate of interest, rate of attorney's fees, a verdict for plaintiff "for the amount of principal, interest, and attorney's fees due on the note sued on," was sufficiently definite to fix the amount due.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 333.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1070*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERROR IN VERDICT.

Where, in an action on a note, the jury found for plaintiff for the amount of principal, interest, and attorney's fees due, less $43, with interest on same, and it appeared that the $43 was deducted from the principal of the note, which consequently carried interest from its date, the error in the verdict as to the $43 allowed defendant was not prejudicial to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1070.*]

4. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 178*) — CONVEYANCE BY GRANTEE—CONSIDERATION.

5. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 173*)—SCHOOL LANDS—SALE—FORFEITURE.

A sale of school land prior to the adoption of Acts April 19, 1901 (Laws 1901, p. 294, c. 125), is governed by the law of 1895 (Laws 1895, p. 63, c. 47), requiring forfeitures of sales of school land for nonresidence to be declared by the commissioner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

6. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 178*)—SCHOOL LANDS—SALE—FORFEITURE.

Where a purchaser of school land while the law of 1895 (Laws 1895, p. 63, c. 47), requiring forfeitures of sales of school land for nonresidence to be declared by the commissioner, was in force, conveyed land to a grantee, who received possession before a forfeiture for the purchaser's abandonment had been declared, the grantee took such title as would support an action against a mere trespasser.

7. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 173*)—SCHOOL LANDS—SALES—ERRORS IN APPLICATION.

Where the application for the purchase of school land erroneously stated that the applicant was an actual occupant of a designated section while he was in fact an occupant of another section, the mistake could be corrected and the applicant's purchase was not absolutely void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

8. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 15*)—SALES OF LAND—CONSIDERATION.

A purchaser of three sections of school land obtained a good title to one section only, and gave to the vendor a note for a part of the price. The purchaser received possession of the section to which he acquired a good title, so that he could acquire title to the other two sections. This section, together with the improvements, might equal in value all that the purchaser agreed to give for the whole. Held, that there was neither a total nor a partial failure of consideration for the note, but the vendor could recover thereon.

9. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 489*)—DEFENSES—TOTAL FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

Under a plea of total failure of consideration for a note sued on, a partial failure may be shown.

Appeal from District Court, Scurry County; C. C. Higgins, Judge.

Action by E. B. Wever against Z. F. Samples. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. C. Wilmeth and Stephens & Miller, for appellant. Ed J. Hamner, for appellee.

CONNER, C. J. This suit was instituted by appellee, Wever, against appellant, Samples, on a promissory note executed by Samples to Wever June 15, 1901, for $1,000, payable 12 months after date, with interest and attorney's fees, and to foreclose the vendor's lien on the following tracts of land situated in Scurry county, viz.: School land sections 97, 102, and 103, block 97, Houston & Texas Central Railway Company surveys. Appellant, Samples, defended upon two grounds: First, a total want of consideration in the note, in that it had been obtained by false and fraudulent representations as to the title of two of the three sections of land for which the note and $1,000 in cash had been given; second, a subsequent agreement by the terms of which the original sale was canceled, a new deed made to section 103, and the note sued on to be returned to Samples for cancellation. The trial resulted in a judgment in appellee's favor for $1,840.20, with foreclosure of the vendor's lien on said three sections of land, and from this judgment Samples has appealed.

Several errors have been assigned, but, in the view we have taken of the case, we think they may be disposed of in a general way. The following facts seem to be undisputed: Said section 103 was duly sold by the state to appellee as an actual settler August 28, 1899, which sale was in good standing at the time of appellee's conveyance of the section to appellant on June 15, 1901. Section 97 was duly sold by the state to one J. N. Burke as an actual settler on August 28, 1899, at $1.50 per acre. Some time in July, 1900, Burke negotiated a sale of section 97 to appellee, and abandoned the section, making formal conveyance thereof to appellee on the 1st day of January, 1901. Section 102 was awarded to one Carruthers by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who purchased or purported to purchase as an actual settler upon school land section 88 as his home section. Carruthers at the time, however, was an actual settler upon section 112, in the same block, instead of upon section 88; it not appearing that Carruthers ever abandoned his actual settlement upon section 112, nor how it happened that in making his application for the purchase of section 102 he stated his actual occupancy as being upon section 88, instead of 112. At a date and in manner not clearly shown Carruthers sold section 102 to appellee, and appellee's application to purchase 102 as additional to his home section 103 appears to have been rejected by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, possibly because his application was not accompanied by a written transfer from Carruthers. In the condition of title thus stated, on June 15, 1901, appellee, Wever, conveyed all three of said sections 97, 102, and 103 to appellant; appellant giving therefor $1,000 in cash and executing the note sued upon in this case, which reserved the vendor's lien upon the land. The evidence is conflicting on the issue of whether at the time of this sale appellee represented that he had good title to all of the sections named. But, however this was, soon thereafter it was learned that section 97 was subject to forfeiture because of Burke's said abandonment, and section 102 subject to forfeiture because of Carruther's want of actual settlement on said section 88, and appellant went to appellee, complaining of such defect of title, and appellee, so appellant testifies, but which appellee denied, agreed to adjust the matter by making a separate conveyance to appellant of section 103, of which appellant was then an actual occupant, having received possession at the time of the original sale, and to return the note sued on, he (appellee) to retain the cash paid. The facts show that, in fact, appellee then made a quitclaim deed separately conveying to appellant section 103 for the recited consideration of $700. Appellee testifies, however, that he did not read the deed, and, in effect, that it was executed for appellant's convenience, and not in rescission of the original sale. At all events, the original awards to section 97 and section 102 were later forfeited by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the lands reawarded subsequent agreement, by the terms of which the note sued upon was to be returned to appellant, and instructed the jury, in event of a finding in appellant's favor on that issue, to find for him. No complaint is made of the charge in this respect, but the court further charged that if the award of section 97 to Burke was not canceled until November 11, 1901, after appellant's sale to appellee, appellee had such title at the time of the original sale as was the subject of contract, and that if at the time of the award of 102 to Carruthers he resided upon and occupied section No. 112 as a home, and that the award to section No. 102 had not been canceled by the state until March, 1902, appellee had such right to section 102 at the date he sold the same to appellant as was the subject of contract. These general instructions, which are assigned as error, were followed by a further instruction to the effect that if the jury found that at the date of appellee's conveyance to appellant appellee had such title to sections 102 and 97 as were subject to contract, and that appellant later purchased these sections upon the same terms upon which they were originally sold to Burke and Carruthers, respectively, then the verdict should be for appellee for the amount of the note sued on, principal, interest, and attorney's fees, "less the amount of money which the defendant Samples paid to procure the repurchase of said land, and such other expenses, if any, shown by the evidence which were reasonable and necessary to procure the title to said land."

The verdict is objected to as too indefinite to warrant the judgment, "in that it fails to fix the amount due on the note sued on, and in that it fails to fix the amount to be deducted from the amount found due on the note." The verdict, in so far as necessary to notice, is as follows: "We, the jury, find our verdict in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant, Samples, for the amount of principal, interest, and attorney's fees due on the note sued on, less the amount of $43, with interest on same, and the foreclosure of the vendor's lien on all the lands described in plaintiff's petition." We fail to find reversible error in the respect here pointed out. The appellee's petition fully set forth the note with its date, principal amount, rate of interest, rate of attorney's fees, etc., which can be looked to in aid of the jury's verdict, and, when so considered, certainly was sufficiently definite to fix the amount due on the note. See Darden v. Mathews, 22 Tex. 320; Veck v. Holt, 71 Tex. 715, 9 S. W. 743; James v. Wilson, 7 Tex. 231; Newcomb v. Walton, 41 Tex. 318; Pearce v. Bell, 21 Tex. 688. If, in any event, there was error in respect to the $43 allowed appellant, it is certainly harmless, the note, which consequently carried interest from its date, and therefore more favorable to appellant than he had a right to demand.

The second and third assignments, however, are more serious, and for convenience will here be stated together:

"Second Assignment of Error: The court erred in the second pargraph of the charge in instructing the jury that, because no forfeiture had been declared, 'E. B. Wever at the time of the sale to Samples had such title to said section No. 97 as was a subject of contract.'"

"Third Assignment of Error: The court erred in the third paragraph of the charge in instructing the jury, with reference to section 102, because no forfeiture had been declared, 'that the plaintiff had such title in section 102 at the date that he sold same to defendant, Samples, as was subject to contract.'"

The contentions are that the charges quoted in the assignments injected false issues in the case and were misleading; it being insisted that when Burke ceased to reside upon and improve section 97, which he did before the sale to appellant, such abandonment worked a forfeiture of his purchase without action on the part of the Commissioner of the General Land Office under the act of April 19, 1901 (Laws 1901, p. 294, c. 125), and that the purchase by Carruthers was void ab initio, and that hence as to these two sections there was a total failure of consideration under the decisions of Lamb v. James, 87 Tex. 485, 29 S. W. 647; Rayner Cattle Co. v. Bedford, 91 Tex. 642, 45 S. W. 554; Williams v. Finley, 99 Tex. 468, 90 S. W. 1087; and other cases. These decisions undoubtedly support the proposition that a sale of public lands, the title to which is in the state, will not constitute a consideration for the promise to pay therefor by a vendee of another without title, but it is to be observed here that section 97 was sold to J. N. Burke on February 27, 1900, and section 102 was awarded to Carruthers in June, 1898. The forfeiture clause of the act of April 19, 1901, therefore, contrary to appellant's contention, did not apply, but instead the law of 1895 (Laws 1895, p. 63, c. 47), which required forfeitures of sales of school land for nonresidence to be declared by the commissioner. See Bates v. Bratton, 96 Tex. 280, 72 S. W. 157; O'Keefe v. McPherson, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 313, 61 S. W. 534; Bumpass v. McLendon, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 519, 101 S. W. 491. The title, therefore, to section 97 at the time of appellee's sale to appellant was not in the state—at least not in the state in the sense that it was on the market and subject to purchase by any other person. The statute authorized a sale by Burke, he being the actual occupant, and the sale to him being in good standing. Appellee, therefore, to whom Burke conveyed, having received possession from Burke, as the evidence tends to show, took such title as would support an action against a mere trespasser, even though cause for forfeiture existed. See Dowding v. Ditmore, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 606, 65 S. W. 486. Appellee's right, if any, to section 102 under his purchase from Carruthers may not appear to be so good. The evidence tends to show, however, that under his purchase from Carruthers, to which appellee testified without objection, appellee took possession together with some improvements thereon, and, if the recitation in Carruthers' application to purchase section 102 that he was an actual occupant of section 88 was a mistake, as appellee insists, then it can hardly be said that the sale to Carruthers was absolutely void. In such event, Carruthers being an actual occupant of section 112, the mistake might have been rectified by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Ratliff v. Terrell, 97 Tex. 522, 80 S. W. 600. But, whatever else may be said, it seems to us that we must, at least, impute to the verdict of the jury in appellee's favor a finding to the effect that by virtue of appellee's possession of and title to, such as it was, sections 97 and 102, appellant likewise received possession of these sections, and had the same awarded to him as additional to section 103, to which appellant undoubtedly received title from appellee. Indeed, we fail to see how under the undisputed evidence it can be said that the consideration of the note sued upon wholly failed. As before stated, it is undisputed that appellee's conveyance to appellant to section 103 was good. By virtue thereof he received possession, and was placed in position which enabled him as an actual occupant of section 103 to acquire perfect title to sections 97 and 102. The verdict of the jury establishes the fact that appellee made no new agreement; that he did not agree to return the note sued upon; and it is perfectly clear that to the extent at least of the value of section 103 the failure of consideration pleaded was not well taken. It is true that under a plea of a total failure of consideration a partial failure may be shown, but appellant neither pleaded nor offered proof of the relative values of sections 97, 102, and 103. If it was conceded that appellee had no title to either section 97 or section 102, or both, we would be at a loss to determine to what extent, if at all, appellant should be allowed an abatement on the note in controversy. For aught that appears in either pleadings or facts, as established by the verdict of the jury, section 103 with the improvements thereon, which appellant undoubtedly received, may in value have equaled all that appellant ever agreed to give for the whole. It is true that appellant testified that in the new agreement section 103 was valued at $700, but this was denied by appellee, and the verdict of the jury is in his favor. So that, as before stated, in the condition of the pleading and proof, and in view of the undisputed evidence, we fail to see how we can afford appellant any relief.

We conclude that the judgment must be affirmed.

STADTLER v. SOUTH TEXAS LUMBER CO.

1. SALES (§ 359*)—ACTION FOR PRICE—EVIDENCE.

In an action for lumber sold and delivered to a contractor for use in the construction of buildings, evidence held to sustain verdict for plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1056; Dec. Dig. § 359.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—REVIEW—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for goods sold, the court on conflicting evidence found that the goods were not to be paid for until a specified time, which was less than two years before action brought, an assignment that the court erred in overruling the plea to the jurisdiction because all sums sued on as due on the account over $500 were barred by the two-year statute of limitations must be overruled.

3. EVIDENCE (§ 205*)—ADMISSIONS—INDEBTEDNESS.

In an action on open accounts for goods sold and delivered, evidence that the items of the respective accounts were admitted by defendant as correct, and that he gave orders on third persons for the accounts which orders were not paid, was admissible to establish the correctness of the accounts.

Appeal from District Court, Freestone County; L. B. Cobb, Judge.

Action by the South Texas Lumber Company against C. H. Stadtler. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

D. T. Garth, for appellant.

BOOKHOUT, J. This is a suit by appellee to recover of appellant on two accounts for lumber alleged to have been sold by appellee to appellant and one Hayes, composing the firm of Stadtler & Hayes. It was alleged that Hayes was insolvent, and the suit was brought solely against Stadtler. Defendant answered by general and special exceptions, denial under oath of the justness of the accounts sued upon, except as to $242.84, and accord and satisfaction. A jury was waived, and the cause was tried by the court, resulting in a judgment for plaintiff for $2,404.66, lows: "The lower court erred in rendering judgment for appellee, South Texas Lumber Company, against defendant, C. H. Stadtler, as the judgment is without evidence to support same, is contrary to the law and evidence, and wholly against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence." This assignment is not sustained. The suit was on two open accounts, which were itemized and alleged to be attached to the petition, and designated, respectively, as "Exhibits A and B." These accounts were for lumber sold and delivered by plaintiff to Stadtler & Hayes to be used in the erection of the St. Agnes Academy and the Brazos Hotel at Houston, aggregating $2,404.66. Stadtler & Hayes had contracts for the erection of these buildings, but failed to complete them, and the owners took charge of and completed them. After they failed on their contracts and the respective owners had taken charge of the properties and completed the buildings, the appellant Stadtler and Timmons, the agent of plaintiff, went over the accounts between plaintiff and defendant and agreed upon the amounts due plaintiff for each of the respective jobs, and Stadtler gave orders on the St. Agnes Academy and Brazos Hotel for the lumber sold by plaintiff to defendant for each of these buildings. The evidence in our opinion was sufficient to show that the items set forth in the accounts sued on were correct, and that defendant owes plaintiff the respective amounts therein charged, aggregating the amount of the judgment.

The second assignment of error is as follows: "The lower court erred in overruling defendant C. H. Stadtler's plea to the jurisdiction of the court because the evidence is uncontroverted that the lawful amount in controversy in this case was less than $500, that the evidence showed that all sums sued upon as due by said account over and above $500 was barred by the two-year statute of limitation." This assignment is submitted as a proposition. The defendant plead limitation to a part of the items sued on, alleging that the lumber was to be paid for as sold and delivered. The plaintiff replied that the amounts were not to be paid until the buildings were completed, and that less than two years had elapsed from the completion of the buildings to the time of filing suit. There was evidence both ways on this issue, and the trial judge found in favor of plaintiff, and, there being evidence to support his finding, this assignment is overruled.

It is contended that the trial court erred in admitting certain testimony of the plaintiff's witness A. D. Timmons. While A. D. Timmons was testifying for plaintiff, he was asked the following question: "State whether true," to the answer to which question defendant objected, because the account sued upon by plaintiff was denied by defendant under oath, and could only be proved up by original and best evidence and the evidence offered was only secondary evidence, and was not admissible; (2) that the account as undertaken to be proved up by said witness Timmons was not shown to be compared by said witness to the books of the South Texas Lumber Company nor books of original entry; (3) that the account as attempted to be proved up by said witness had not been compared to the account sued upon, and was not shown that it was in fact a copy of the account sued upon by plaintiff, nor were any of the items therein shown to be the same items as in the account sued upon by plaintiff. The court overruled the objections of the defendant, and the said witness testified as follows: "The account I now examine which is attached to the deposition of H. A. Hurt was sold to Stadtler & Hayes by the South Texas Lumber Company. It was made by Mr. Stadtler to build the St. Agnes Academy and Brazos Hotel. I went over the account with Mr. Stadtler, and he O. K'd. it. He gave me an order on the owners of the buildings for the money due us on the account he and I went over." There was no error in admitting the testimony to show that the items of the respective accounts were admitted by Stadtler as correct, and that he gave an order on each of the owners of the buildings for the accounts then owing. It is not claimed that either of these orders had been paid, and the evidence, as a whole, is sufficient to show that the exhibits attached to the petition are for the same accounts admitted by Stadtler to be correct.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

Dunklin, J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from District Court, Bosque County; O. L. Lockett, Judge.

Action by J. L. Zumwalt against the Texas Central Railroad Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Prendergast & Williams, for appellant. J. A. Kibler and Cureton & Cureton, for appellee.

CONNER, C. J. Appellant sued the appellee company to recover damages for the loss of an eye caused by the alleged negligence of Dr. S. Webb, the chief surgeon of appellee's hospital department at Walnut Springs. The defense was that the department was conducted without profit and as a charity. After the introduction of the evidence the jury were peremptorily charged in appellee's favor, and from the verdict and judgment in accord with such instruction this appeal has been prosecuted.

The action of the court is not defended on the theory that the evidence did not raise the issue of negligence on Dr. Webb's part, so that there remains for our determination the single vital question of whether the court was justified in giving the peremptory instruction to find for appellee, on the ground that the evidence conclusively showed that appellee, in the undertaking of its hospital and treatment of sick and injured employés, was engaged in a charity. Appellee affirms that it was, and that therefore it is liable only for negligence in the employment of the surgeon. This appellant denies. The evidence relevant to the question is to the effect that appellant in April, 1907, had been employed by the appellee company, and was located at Walnut Springs; that as such employé he was engaged as a boiler maker, receiving pay at the rate of 38 cents an hour for the time employed, working 10 hours a day; that the wages of appellee's employés were paid monthly, there being deducted out of each month's wages the sum of 50 cents for medical treatment at the hospital. Appellant thus states it: "Each and every month we were paid by the company our full month's pay, with the exception of 50 cents, which was deducted by the railroad company for medical treatment at the hospital. The money was not turned over to us to pay into the hospital fund, but the company in the first place deducted the 50 cents from our salary or from our pay check, and for this 50 cents per month the company was to give its employés medical treatment in its hospital. Other than this 50 cents per month no further charge was to be made for medical treatment at this hospital or by the company physician." It was otherwise shown that the appellee was a railroad company operating a line of railroad from Waco to Walnut Springs and other places; that appellant was injured and treated by Dr. Webb, who had been employed and was acting in accordance with a written contract, whereby Dr. Webb agreed to act as chief surgeon of the appellee company, and as such to establish and maintain at Walnut Springs "an adequate and suitable hospital," at his own expense, for the treatment of all employés of appellee who were "entitled to hospital privileges" as provided in the contract, and to furnish all instruments, devices, appliances, medicines, and other necessaries "for the proper treatment of all such employés and to treat such employés who were entitled to hospital privileges under this contract, or the rules and regulations" of appellee governing in the matter, in consideration of which appellee agreed "to collect from all of its white employés, except its general officers, the sum of fifty cents per month as hospital fees," and to deliver the same to Dr. Webb as compensation for his services, etc. The contract further provided that Dr. Webb should appoint local surgeons at all important towns on the line of appellee's railway, and that such local surgeons might be called by appellee "to treat in cases of emergency any employé entitled to hospital privileges," and that the fees of such local surgeons for such services should be deducted by appellee from the hospital fund provided for. Appellee also agreed, as part compensation to all local surgeons appointed under the contract, to furnish them annual transportation over its line of road without cost to Dr. Webb. The contract provided that it should "continue in force for a term of five years" from its date, "subject, however, to be terminated by either party hereto by giving written notice of sixty days to the other party of his intention so to do." Mr. Hamilton, appellee's vice president and general manager, testified that the average number of men employed by the company during the year 1906 was about 723, for 1907 about 980; that during the year 1907 there was received from the employés as hospital fees $4,445; that the money is received by the defendant company, and in the course of business deposited in the First National Bank of Waco, and, the payments of the pay roll and the payments to the chief surgeon are made by checks on the First National Bank; that the deduction from the wages of the employés is sent to pellee was without negligence in his employment.

Appellee relies, in support of the court's action in giving the peremptory instruction, upon the case of the G., H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Hanway (Tex. Civ. App.) 57 S. W. 697, by the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fourth District, and the case of the same railway company against Scott, by the same court, in 44 S. W. 589; but, if these cases are subject to the construction given them by appellee, we feel constrained to differ from them. We feel no inclination to disagree with the great weight of authority to the effect that, where a railroad company or person undertakes as a pure charity to furnish medical treatment to a sick or injured person, the duty of such company or person only requires the exercise of due care in the employment of a prudent and careful physician, and that such company or person cannot be made liable beyond this for negligence on the part of the physician, and the case of Railway v. Scott, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 321, 44 S. W. 589, may be said to fall fairly within that rule. The case of Railway v. Hanway, above cited, however, seems more clearly to support appellee's position, and we do not know that we should undertake to distinguish it from the case now before us, save that it does not very clearly appear from the report of the case that the railway company entered into any undertaking with its employés to treat them for the monthly deductions from their wages, as we think the evidence in the case before us tends to show. But whether in this respect the cases are distinguishable or not, it is to be noted that the Supreme Court was apparently careful not to approve the Hanway Case when called upon to review it, as will appear from the report in 94 Tex. 76, 58 S. W. 724, and we therefore feel less hesitation in following our own views.

In the case of Texas & Pacific Coal Co. v. Connaughten, by this court, reported in 20 Tex. Civ. App. 642, 50 S. W. 173, the company employed and paid physicians, and undertook to treat its employés when sick or injured, deducting, as here, 50 cents per month from each employé's wages. The employés, as here, had no interest in the fund thus raised, nor in its distribution, and it was held that the engagement of the company was not a charity, and that it was liable for the negligence of its physician. It is true that it was there shown that after the payment of all hospital expenses there was a balance of several thousand dollars arising from the deduction made from the wages of the employés, which went to the credit of the company, and in this respect that case is distinguishable from the Hanway Case, as clearly pointed out by the Supreme Court in the wages of employés by the terms of the contract with Dr. Webb are to be applied in the payment for the services of Dr. Webb as chief surgeon, and of local surgeons, it seems to us that it is a misnomer to designate as a pure charity the conduct of appellee's hospital department. The evidence certainly tends to show that the hospital was conducted as a distinct department of appellee's business as a carrier; that it distinctly agreed with the employés, including appellant, for the sum of 50 cents per month to be deducted out of the wages due such employés, to furnish them medical and surgical treatment in case of sickness or injury during employment. It does not appear that the employés were permitted to have any control whatever over the fund thus raised, or in the employment of the chief surgeon or other attendants, nor did they have voice otherwise in the distribution of the fund so contributed. While it appeared that during the life of the present contract with Dr. Webb all proceeds of the fund are to be devoted to the payment of his services and the services of his assistants, neither the contract nor appellee's general plan in the management of the department furnishes any evidence that it is thus always to be continued, or that, in event of a future contract whereby the company should be able to secure the services of a sufficient number of physicians and surgeons to conduct its hospital department for a less sum than should be derived from deductions made from the wages of its employés, the excess should belong to the employés rather than to the appellee company. By the terms of the agreement between the company and its employés, as the evidence tends to show, the deductions were at all events to be made and at all events went to the credit of appellee's general fund in the bank, and in the very contract made with Dr. Webb appellee recognizes that certain of its employés, who include appellant, were "entitled" to treatment. If so entitled by virtue of an "understanding" or agreement on appellee's part with its said employés in consideration of the monthly deductions from their wages, as appellant's evidence at least tends to show, then appellee cannot escape from its obligation to the employés to furnish suitable medical and surgical services, in event of their sickness or injury, whatever might be the state of the accumulated fund.

The fact that it does not appear, as in the Connaughten Case, that there is under the contract with Dr. Webb a distinct pecuniary profit in the conduct of the hospital department should not, it seems to us, be conclusive. As an incident to its main business it may be deemed to be otherwise beneficial and profitable. We would feel a hesitancy in saying that as so incidental to its business as a railway carrier it is outside of the scope of its corporate powers to maintain a hospital department. Aside from charitable purposes, for which railway companies are not organized, it may be said to be in the pecuniary interest of such a company to maintain a state of health and capability among its employés as instrumentalities of its business. Why should it be said that this is in no sense of profit to appellee? True, perhaps, no direct pecuniary benefit is received, but the same may be said to be the case in the conduct of its machine shops and other departments, where its insensate physical properties are repaired when injured. At least it seems to us that it was for the jury and not the court, to say from all the circumstances, including its general plan, whether appellee's hospital department was conducted as a mere charity and not for profit. While we are aware that authorities may be found of a contrary tendency, among which may be noted the case of U. P. Ry. Co. v. Artist, by the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Wyoming, 60 Fed. 365, 9 C. C. A. 14, 23 L. R. A. 581, we are nevertheless not entirely without authority in general support of the views we have expressed. Thus, in the case of Sawdey v. Spokane Falls & N. Ry. Co., by the Supreme Court of Washington, reported in 30 Wash. 349, 70 Pac. 972, 94 Am. St. Rep. 880, where a hospital fund was provided, as here, from monthly deductions of the wages of the railway employés, it was said that if the respondent (the railway company) "did contract for a consideration, to treat its employés for any injury they might receive while in its employ, it is liable for the malpractice of the surgeon employed to treat the appellant; and this question, as we say, should have been submitted to the jury." We approve the quotation as applicable here; and, while it has been said that charity "covereth a multitude of sins," we do not think this mantle should be used to hide the wrongs, if any, of which appellant complains, if in fact committed under the circumstances and with agreement as alleged by him. See, also, Glavin v. Rhode Island Hospital, 12 R. I. 411, 34 Am. Rep. 675; Gitzhoffen v. Sisters of Holy Cross Hospital Ass'n, by the Supreme Court of Utah, 32 Utah, 46, 88 Pac. 691, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 161; Richardson v. Carbon Hill Coal Co., 6 Wash. 52, 32 Pac. 1012, 20 L. R. A. 338.

We conclude that the court erred in giving the peremptory instruction, and that the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, for trial in accordance with the views herein expressed.

STALEY & BARNSDALL v. DERDEN.

1. COURTS (§ 163*)—COUNTY COURT—JURISDICTION—INJUNCTION AFFECTING INTEREST IN LAND.

Plaintiff conveyed to defendant the oil and other mineral estate in certain land, with the right to drill wells, lay pipes, etc., for the term of 25 years, and as long thereafter as oil, etc., should be found in paying quantities; it being stipulated that the grant was not intended as a franchise merely, but as a conveyance of the property for the purpose stated. As part of the consideration, defendant agreed to give plaintiff one-eighth of the oil produced, the same to be delivered to plaintiff in the pipe line, free of charge. Held, that the contract was a conveyance of an interest in land, so that the county court had no jurisdiction to compel defendant by injunction to handle oil, to be thereafter severed from the land, in a given way, and to deliver one-eighth of it to plaintiff each month.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 410–411; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

2. COURTS (§ 169*)—COUNTY COURT—JURISDICTION — INJUNCTION — AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

The constitutional provision limiting the jurisdiction of the county court to suits where the amount in controversy exceeds $200 and does not exceed $1,000 applies to writs of injunction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 413–416; Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

3. COURTS (§ 170*)—COUNTY COURT—JURISDICTION — AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY — INJUNCTION—PLEADING.

To confer jurisdiction on the county court to enforce a contract whereby defendant, in consideration of a grant of the oil in certain land, agreed to give plaintiff a portion of the oil to be produced, it was necessary to allege the value of such oil to be within the limits prescribed by the constitutional provision regulating the jurisdicton of the court.

Appeal from Navarro County Court; J. M. Blanding, Judge.

Action by W. L. Derden against Staley & Barnsdall. From an order granting an injunction, defendants appeal. Reversed, and injunction dismissed.

Richard Mays, for appellants. W. J. McKie and E. J. Gibson, for appellee.

RAINEY, C. J. This is an appeal from an order entered by the county judge of Navarro county, granted in chambers, restraining appellants from using and converting the one-eighth part of the product from the Derden premises, the same being described in plaintiff's petition, until further order of the court, and requiring them, pending the litigation, to file monthly statements, showing the amount of the oil production from said premises, and also requiring appellants "to connect and impound a full one-eighth of the oil production each month into a single tank located on the premises, that is free of leaks, and that will hold said oil, and such tank as is now connected with the pipe line of the Navarro Refining Company, which tank the defendant is directed to point out to the plaintiff, W. L. Derden, and thus the defendant is required to deliver into actual possession of the said Derden each month hereafter, but including the month of March, his full one-eighth of the production from the Derden premises, after which said defendant is directed to permit said Derden either to remove said one-eighth of the production from the premises, either in wagons, or by having it run into the pipe line of the Navarro Refining Company, and this without interference on the part of said defendants." A plea to the jurisdiction of the court was overruled, and the injunction, as stated, was granted. The suit of appellee was to recover of Staley the sum of $600, the value of oil converted, and for damages done him by the violation of certain provisions of an oil contract entered into with said Staley, the sum total sued for being less than $1,000. Barnsdall, after the making of said contract, became a partner of Staley, and made himself a party defendant to said suit.

The terms of the contract between Derden and Staley, bearing upon the matters in controversy, stated in appellants' brief, are as follows: Derden conveyed to Staley the petroleum oil, and other mineral estate, in and to several tracts of land contiguously situated, aggregating about 1,200 acres. It was stipulated in the conveyance that Derden did "bargain, sell, alien and convey unto the said W. H. Staley, all of the oil, gas, coal and other minerals in and under said premises, together with the right of ingress and egress at all times, for the purpose of drilling wells for oil, gas and other minerals, and for operating for minerals, and to lay all pipes he shall deem it necessary and proper for the conduct of operations, for the preparation of work thereon, and for the production on said premises, and for the drilling, mining and transporting of oil, gas and other minerals on and from the said premises." Said conveyance also vested in Staley "the right of way over and across the said described lands, to be used in connection with the operation and production of the said lands and of such other premises and holdings of the said party of the second part (Staley), for the purpose of laying, operating and maintaining gas, oil and air lines, pipes, and he (Staley) shall have the right to erect along the said right of way, and at such other place or places, as he shall deem proper and convenient to erect, construct and maintain a telephone or telegraph line or lines, and for that purpose, to plant a proper and sufficient line of poles in and upon the said land, and shall also have and maintain such pumping plants for all oil, air and water, or either, as he (Staley) shall deem necessary and proper, and shall at all times have the right to enter upon said premises for the purpose of maintaining and repairing any and all of the said lines and other structures and appliances which he may place on said premises. The said W. H. Staley to have and to hold the premises, rights and privileges herein granted to him, his heirs and assigns, for the term of twenty-five years, from the date hereof, and as long thereafter as oil, gas and other minerals are found on said premises in paying or profitable quantities." It is further provided that: "In laying and placing the said oil, gas and air lines over, across and upon the said premises, I (Staley) agree to bury the same a sufficient depth below the surface, so as that the same shall in no way interfere with the cultivation and agricultural use of the said lands. That whatever injury, if any, shall occur to any growing crop on said premises or pasture lands by the placing and erecting of derricks and machinery, and laying of pipes, and from the operation of drilling of wells on said premises, and on account of laying the oil, gas and air lines, are to be settled for by me (Staley) when the damage shall be estimated and agreed upon by and between the parties at interest (Staley and Derden) and if no agreement can be reached between me and such parties, or party, the arbitrators shall be selected, one each by the parties hereto, and they shall select the third, if necessary, and their estimate shall be paid by me."

It was expressly stipulated that "the grant made by the terms of this contract is not intended as a franchise merely, but shall be construed and held to be a conveyance of the said property described for the purpose hereinbefore mentioned, and both parties herein so intend." As a part of the consideration for said conveyance, Staley agreed to give Derden a royalty of one-eighth of the oil produced. The conveyance recites that: "I (Derden) reserving, however, to myself, the party of the first part, the one-eighth part of all the oil produced and saved upon and from said premises, the same to be delivered to, and received by me (Derden) in the pipe line, to my credit, free of charge." As a further consideration Staley agreed to begin operation for drilling of a well, within 60 days, and to drill as many as six wells each year successively, "until there shall be at least as many as one gas well for each 25 acres of said land, which shall prove to be gas territory, or, if oil wells are developed, then as many as one well to each 10 acres of said land, which may prove to be oil territory; but whether gas or oil, or both shall be found, I shall drill as many as six wells each succeeding year until the area of said territory shall be exhausted, or the premises shall be found or become unprofitable to prospect or operate, or be by me abandoned as to any unexplored part thereof." In consideration for the pipe line, pump station and right of way easement upon said land, Staley agreed to pay Derden the sum of $100 cash and $25 annually in advance, "so long as I (Staley) may use the said lines. In the event gas wells were developed with a sufficient supply of gas to justify the use of the same through the pipe line to be used off the premises, then I (Staley) agree to pay to the party of the first part (Derden) $100 per year, for each well from which gas is so used, the payments to be made quarterly, that is, $25 in advance every three months for each well so used. If gas is found on the premises Derden shall have the right, at his own expense and risk, to connect his residence in the city of Corsicana, with the gas main owned by me (Staley) and to use gas for domestic purposes free of charge or cost"—if coal shall be found in paying quantities, Staley to pay Derden four cents for each ton mined and marketed, payments to be made to Derden quarterly. Staley, when requested by Derden, shall bury all pipes used in the operation and production of oil and gas from the said wells; Staley "to have the use, free of charge, of any water, oil or gas, produced on the said lands for the purpose of drilling and operating on said premises in the production and securing of oil, gas and other minerals."

On the question of jurisdiction appellants contend that: "Appellee's cause of action, upon which the injunction issued, was that for specific performance of covenants contained in a conveyance with reference to land. Jurisdiction of the county judge to grant the writ cannot be acquired because of anticipation that oil might thereafter be severed from the realty and become personalty. On the date the writ was issued the oil was in place, and had not been severed, and was therefore a part of the realty, and had not become personalty. All of the severed oil had been disposed of on that date. The decree upon which the writ issued does not deal with oil then severed, but operates wholly upon oil to be thereafter severed in the future." There is no question as to the contract between Derden and Staley being a conveyance of an interest in land, and the general laws regarding real estate apply to its enforcement. Benavides v. Hunt, 79 Tex. 383, 15 S. W. 396; Oil Co. v. Colquitt, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 292, 69 S. W. 169. The county court has no jurisdiction to grant an injunction which affects an interest and estate in land. Scripture v. Kent, 1 W. & W., § 1057; Gascamp v. Drews, 2 W. & W., § 95. The injunction required the defendants thereafter to "impound a full one-eighth of all the oil production each month into a single tank located on the premises, that is free of leaks, and that will hold said oil, and such tank as is connected with the pipe line of the Navarro Refining Company, which tank the defendant is directed to point out to the plaintiff, W. L. Derden, and thus the defendant is required to deliver into actual possession of the said Derden each month hereafter * * * his full one-eighth of the production from the Derden premises, after which said defendant is directed to permit said Derden either to remove said one-eighth of the production from the premises, either in wagons, or by having it run into the pipe line of the Navarro Refining Company, and this without interference on the part of said defendant." This order directs the oil thereafter produced to be handled in a given way, and therein the court has assumed jurisdiction of oil that is real estate, and has not been severed from the land, thus attempting to enforce a contract relating to land, and which order affected the rights to an interest or estate in land. At the time the writ was granted it was not shown that any oil that had been severed from the land was on hand, and the court had no right to assume jurisdiction over the oil that was expected to be thereafter produced.

The appellant contends that "the jurisdiction of the county court to issue writs of injunction is limited. Before the county judge can exercise the power, it must affirmatively appear from the allegations of the plaintiff's petition that the value of the subject-matter, to protect which the intervention of the court's equity powers is sought, is more than $200, and does not exceed $1,000." The jurisdiction of the county court is limited by the Constitution to suits where the amount in controversy exceeds $200 and does not exceed $1,000. "The same rule is applicable to writs of injunction, which can only be issued by the county court when the matter in controversy exceeds $200 and does not exceed $1,000 in value." De Witt County v. Wischkemper, 95 Tex. 435, 67 S. W. 882. The original petition alleged, in substance, a breach of the contract, a conversion of oil to the value of $600, and damages to the premises and crops in the sum of $350. An amendment to the petition was filed, and, in addition to the averments in the original, set forth the violation of the contract by Staley, in converting the oil, refusal to pay or account for the oil produced, etc., and averred as follows: " 'In view of wrongs and injuries inflicted upon him by defendant, and in view of defendant's determination to continue to convert and appropriate all of the products of said wells to his own use and benefit, and in view of the facts and circumstances attendant upon the situation as above set out and explained, that plaintiff has no remedy at law, which is sufficient, adequate, and complete to protect him against the further wrongdoing and illegal and unlawful conduct of defendant towards this plaintiff, and that plaintiff is therefore entitled to invoke the equitable powers of this court to restrain and enjoin the defendant from the further illegal and unlawful conversion and appropriation of the daily output of said wells, and is entitled to receive relief by the issuance of a temporary writ of injunction of the nature hereinafter more fully demanded.' Plaintiff prayed for an injunction restraining Staley 'from using, appropriating, or converting any of the oil saved or produced upon said premises by said nine wells, which are not connected with said pipe line, viz., the pipe line of Navarro Refining Company, and that upon final hearing the injunction granted be perpetuated.'" The contract was to run for 25 years from its date in 1906, and the petition sought to enforce it as to the production of oil. There was no allegation as to the value of the oil to be produced. In order to confer jurisdiction on the county court to enforce the contract as to the oil thereafter produced, it was necessary to allege the value of such oil to be within the limits prescribed by the Constitution.

We are of the opinion that the county court exceeded its jurisdiction in granting said injunction, and the judgment relating thereto is reversed, and the injunction dismissed.

WOOLEY v. CORLEY.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 21, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 6, 1909.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 79*)—PLEADINGS—WHAT CONSTITUTES—CITATION.

The citation in a justice's court is issued in advance of the appearance of the parties for pleading, and is not a part of the pleadings, and may or may not state plaintiff's cause of action, or may state a demand different from that pleaded in the petition, so that the county court could not look to the justice's citation to determine what was plaintiff's cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 250; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 174*)—APPEAL—AMENDMENT—NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

Plaintiff's demand in a justice's court, as shown by the citation, was for $165 damages, for conversion by defendant, acting through his agents, of 55 trees of the value of $3 each, and the amended petition filed in the county court alleged that defendant, together with another, converted the same number of trees, made them into cross-ties, and laid the damage at 35 cents per tie, aggregating $154. Held, that the amendment did not state a cause of action different from that shown by the citation, not having changed defendant's liability.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 670; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 174*)—APPEAL—AMENDMENT TO CONFORM TO PROOF.

Plaintiff, in an action in a justice's court, could amend his petition on appeal to the county court so as to conform it to the details of the evidence developed at trial, without violating the rule against pleading a new cause of action by amendment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 685; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

Appeal from Red River County Court; J. M. Deaver, Judge.

Action by J. H. Wooley against Sam Corley. From a judgment dismissing the petition, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Chambers & Black, for appellant. Kennedy & Robbins, for appellee.

HODGES, J. On the 12th day of November, 1907, the appellant instituted this suit in the justice court of precinct No. 1 of Red River county against the appellee for damages for the conversion of 55 trees valued at $165. The case was tried on the 30th of December following, resulting in a judgment in favor of the defendant in the suit. The appellant, plaintiff below, appealed to the county court. The pleadings of the parties in the justice court were oral, and it appears from the record that the justice of the peace failed to make any notation upon his docket of what the pleadings were, as required by the statute. After being transferred to the county court, the cause was continued for one or more terms, and the parties filed written pleadings. The case was called for trial upon a pleading styled "The Second Amended Original Petition," in which the appellant thus states his cause of action: "That heretofore, to wit, at divers and sundry dates between the 1st day of September, A. D. 1907, and the 1st day of December, 1907, the defendant, Dr. Sam Corley, acting jointly with John Anderson, who resides near Clarksville, Tex., entered upon plaintiff's said land without plaintiff's consent or knowledge, and against his wishes, and cut therefrom 55 trees standing on said land, and which were the property of this plaintiff, and made them into 440 railroad cross-ties of the value of 35 cents each, and willfully and wrongfully converted said cross-ties to their own use and benefit, to plaintiff's great damage $154." And said second amended petition went further, and pleaded in the alternative as follows: "Plaintiff further alleges that in the event that the proof shows that the defendant, Dr. Sam Corley, was not a party to the original cutting of the trees and the making of the ties, and was in no way connected therewith, nevertheless he is still liable to plaintiff in the amount of damages above specified, for the following good and sufficient reason, to wit: That after said trees were cut the defendant, acting jointly with John Anderson, wrongfully converted said ties and sold them to John E. Barry and appropriated the proceeds to his own use and benefit, and that the defendant willfully and wrongfully converted the 440 ties in the way and manner aforesaid to plaintiff's great damage $154." In reply to this the appellee filed his second amended answer, in which appears the following objection, styled "An Exception to the Plaintiff's Petition": "On October 28, 1908, the defendant filed his second amended answer in reply to plaintiff's second amended petition, which said answer consisted of special demurrers, general denial, and special answer, none of which need be noticed here except his first special exception, which in substance was as follows: 'The defendant was sued in the justice of the peace court, and from a judgment rendered therein this case is now pending in this court on appeal, for an individual and separate tort alleged by plaintiff to have been committed by defendant, acting by and through his servants and employés, in entering upon plaintiff's land, and without his authority, consent, or knowledge, and cutting and causing to be cut therefrom 55 trees of the value of $3 per tree, and plaintiff's second amended petition sets up a joint tort with one John Anderson, committed at a different time, and a joint conversion of different property and of different cause of action, with new and different parties. It cannot and should not be considered by this court, but should be stricken out, and defendant discharged with his cost.'" This objection was treated by the court as an exception to the amended petition, was sustained, and the plaintiff's suit dismissed. Of this action the appellant complains in his first assignment of error.

The record contains no statement of facts, and the situation attending the action of the court and the evidence upon which he relied are presented in a bill of exception made out by the county judge, the parties being unable to agree upon a bill. This bill of exception shows that the cause was called for trial on the 28th of October, 1908, and was heard upon the defendant's exceptions to the plaintiff's amended petition. The court, after hearing the same and argument of counsel, sustained the exception; and, the plaintiff declining to amend, the case was dismissed. The bill, after reciting many things unnecessary here to mention, states that there was no evidence offered, or attempted to be offered, showing what the pleadings of the plaintiff in the justice court were, and that the court looked to the citation issued out of the justice court for the purpose of ascertaining what those pleadings were. From an inspection of the citation he concluded and held that the plaintiff's amended original petition alleges a conversion by joint tort-feasors, where as in the justice court a single and separate tort only was charged against the defendant in the suit. Upon this ground he sustained the exception as before stated. It is evident that the trial judge treated the citation issued out of the justice court as the plaintiff's pleading in that court. Article 358 of the statute (Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897) provides that either party may plead any new matter in the county or district court which was not presented in the court below, but no new cause of action shall be set up by the plaintiff, etc. It is also provided by article 1599 that when a claim or demand is lodged with the justice of the peace for suit, it shall be his duty to issue forthwith a writ or citation to the defendant, and in addition to other requirements the citation must state the nature of the plaintiff's demand. When a proper objection is made to the petition of the plaintiff for violating the inhibition against the setting up of a new cause of action in the county or district court, this presents an issue of fact which must be determined in the same manner as are other issues of fact involved in the case, and not a question of law which the court may dispose of upon an exception without evidence. The citation is not a part of the pleading of the plaintiff in the justice court. Kerr v. Murrell, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 890. It is a writ which the justice of the peace is required to issue, and with which the plaintiff presumably has no connection. It is issued in advance of the appearance of the parties for trial and pleading. It may or may not contain a statement of the cause of action as pleaded by the plaintiff. Certainly the law will not presume that it does. Upon the appearance of the defendant the plaintiff may state a cause of action entirely different from the nature of the demand embodied in the citation. If the defendant answers the demand as pleaded, he certainly is in no attitude thereafter to complain that the cause of action is not the same as that stated in the citation. We think the assignment of error should be sustained; that the court acted entirely without evidence to justify the ruling made.

But, assuming that the court's action was based upon sufficient evidence; that he had a right to consult the citation as the proper presentation of the nature of the plaintiff's cause of action in the justice court—we do not think it follows that he was justified in holding that the allegations contained in the petition in the county court were so different from the nature of the demand as stated in the citation as to constitute a new cause of action. The nature of the demand as stated in the citation was that the defendant in the suit, acting through his agents, converted 55 trees and made them into cross-ties, and places his damages at $3 per tree, total $165. In the amended petition filed in the county court he charges that the defendant, acting in conjunction with another, converted the same number of trees and made them into cross-ties, and lays the damages at 35 cents per tie, aggregating the sum of $154. The conduct for which the plaintiff in the suit sought redress was the wrongful conversion of the timber by the defendant. The fact that in one court he is charged with having committed the wrongs through agents, and in another court with having committed the same wrongs jointly with another party, does not change the nature of the trespass complained of. It neither increases nor diminishes the legal liability of the wrongdoer, nor does it charge him with a different tort. The defendant would be just as guilty, and his liability would be just as great, if he converted the timber in conjunction with another as if he had done it alone. The plaintiff in the suit had the right, if he felt disposed, to amend his pleading in the county court so as to conform his allegations to the details of evidence which the facts might develop upon the trial of the cause. If in doing so he states those details somewhat differently from the manner in which they were pleaded in the justice court, even though it amount to new matter, he does not thereby set up a new cause of action or violate the statute.

The judgment of the county court is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded.

DURHAM v. GARRETT et al.

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 719*)—ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1018, requires that an appellant or plaintiff in error shall file with the clerk of the lower court an assignment of errors. Supreme Court Rule 29 (67 S. W. xv) provides that the transcript must contain a copy of the assignment of errors filed in accordance with the rules of the district court. Held, that where the record fails to show any assignment of error filed with the lower court, and no error is apparent of record, the judgment below will be affirmed.

Appeal from Hamilton County Court; A. E. Scott, Judge.

Action by J. J. Durham against E. A. Garrett and others. There was a judgment by default as against certain defendants and a directed judgment for another defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

B. N. Carter and R. Q. Murphree, for appellant. J. L. Lewis and Eidson & Eidson, for appellees.

RICE, J. This suit was brought by appellant against E. A. Garrett, J. W. Garrett, and W. W. Ledbetter to recover on two certain promissory notes, alleged to have been executed by E. A. Garrett in part payment for a stock of merchandise sold by appellant to said E. A. Garrett. Recovery is sought against Ledbetter solely upon the ground that he, subsequent to the execution of said notes, became a partner of said Garrett's in conducting said mercantile business. On trial, the Garretts having made default, judgment was entered in appellant's favor as against them for the amount of said notes. Ledbetter answered by general demurrer, general denial, and a special plea under oath, denying that he was a partner in said firm. Upon trial, after hearing all the facts, the court peremptorily instructed a verdict in favor of appellee Ledbetter, and verdict and judgment were rendered in accordance therewith, from which judgment this appeal is taken.

Although appellant has duly filed his brief complaining of several rulings of the court, amongst others the peremptory instruction in behalf of appellee Ledbetter, yet the transcript contains no assignment of errors as required by the statute and the rules, for which reason appellee objects to a consideration thereof by this court, and asks the affirmance of the judgment. Article 1018, Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, requires that the appellant or plaintiff in error shall, in all cases, file with the clerk of the court below an assignment of errors, distinctly specifying the grounds on which he relies before he takes the transcript of the record from the clerk's office, and that all errors not distinctly specified are waived. Rule 29 for the government of this court (67 S. W. xv) provides that before a case is properly prepared for submission the transcript must contain a copy of the assignment of errors filed in accordance with the rules of the district court.

Since the record fails to show that any assignment of error was filed in the lower court, and no error is apparent of record in the proceedings, there is no question before us for consideration, and it is our duty to affirm the judgment of the court below, and it is so ordered. See Bopp v. Ganzer (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 444; Lewis v. Steiner, 84 Tex. 364, 19 S. W. 516.

Judgment affirmed.

ALLEN et al. v. HUTCHESON.†

CORPORATIONS (§ 317*)—MISCONDUCT OF OFFICERS—FRAUD.

A decree in a former suit to recover shares of stock of a corporation required the corporation to issue the certificates to A. impressed with trusts in favor of other parties, and to pay him dividends accruing thereon, and directed that all dividends and the earnings thereafter accruing should be prorated among A. and his cestui que trusts until the trusts were satisfied, when title to the stock should become absolute in A. A. prorated the dividends due at the time of the decree and one other dividend among the beneficiaries, and subsequently he and other persons claiming to be directors of the corporation, but who had not been legally elected, expended the earnings of the company for their salaries and in buying land in which they were interested and in boring an oil well without authority; A. knowing what was being done if he did not actively participate therein. Held, that their acts, if not actually fraudulent, constituted constructive fraud, so as to make them all liable to one of A.'s cestui que trusts for his pro rata share of the money earned by the corporation

Error from District Court, Harris County; Chas. E. Ashe, Judge.

Action by J. C. Hutcheson against A. C. Allen and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Masterson, Atkinson & Masterson, for plaintiffs in error. Hutcheson, Campbell & Hutcheson, for defendant in error.

NEILL, J. On August 15, 1903, the J. J. Tobin Oil Company was incorporated under the laws of this state, L. E. Daniell, J. J. Tobin, M. M. Jackson, Stephen Jackson, and M. A. Robertson being the original incorporators, and who were declared in the articles of incorporation to be the directors for the first year. The powers of the corporation, as declared in its charter, were "for the establishment of an oil company for the purpose of producing, selling, and marketing petroleum, with authority to contract for the lease and purchase of the right to prospect for, develop and use coal and other minerals, and petroleum; also the right to erect, build and own all necessary oil tanks, cars and pipes necessary for the operation of the business of said association." The charter also provided that the place of business of the association should be in the town of Sour Lake, Hardin county, Tex., and that it should be its principal office, that its business should be transacted by five directors, who should be elected by the stockholders annually, on the first Tuesday in July, and that its capital stock should be $40,000, to be divided into 400 shares of $100 each. After its organization 100 shares of the capital stock, being one-half of the stock issued, became involved in litigation. In the suit A. C. Allen was plaintiff, and the Oil Company, L. E. Daniell, and others, among whom was J. C. Hutcheson, were defendants, or adverse parties. The cause just referred to was styled "A. C. Allen v. L. E. Daniell et al.," was numbered 3,439, and brought in the Sixty-First judicial district. On May 7, 1904, an agreed judgment was entered in that suit, the substance of which is as follows: A. C. Allen recovered against all defendants, all interveners, and parties to the suit the entire 100 shares of stock sued for (the certificates for the stock being specifically described in the judgment), charged with certain trusts impressed upon the stock by the judgment or decree, which are as follows: $15,450 for the benefit of A. C. Allen; $4,000 for the benefit of the First National Bank of Sour Lake, Tex., $7,000 for the benefit of Geo. W. Armstrong, and $10,750 for the benefit of J. C. Hutcheson. The judgment further orders that the oil company shall issue certificates for said 100 shares of stock to A. C. Allen in such way as he may retofore accrued on said 100 shares of stock, and dividends that may thereafter accrue thereon; that the money in the registry of the court of the Fifty-Fifth judicial district and in the First National Bank of Houston, Tex., be prorated among Allen, the First National Bank of Sour Lake, Geo. W. Armstrong, and J. C. Hutcheson, according to the several amounts allowed them by the decree; that all dividends and earnings which might thereafter accrue upon the 100 shares of stock should be prorated among A. C. Allen, the First National Bank of Sour Lake, Geo. W. Armstrong, and J. C. Hutcheson, proportionate to their several amounts until they shall have been fully paid and discharged, and that then the title to said 100 shares of stock should become absolute in A. C. Allen, and not before; that the oil company should at once put on the market and dispose of the oil then on hand, and deposit the money realized therefrom, applicable to said 100 shares of stock affected by the decree, in court for distribution as ordered.

At the time the agreed judgment was entered the company had four wells on its 10-acre tract at Sour Lake, one of which at that time was not productive, and had been abandoned prior to that time. One other produced very little, and after that time it did not pay to operate it. The other two produced large quantities of oil, and these conditions prevailed on the 1st of January following. The wells were operated under lease at that time, and the company received two-thirds of their gross production, amounting to about $5,000 per month, free of any expense. There were no outstanding debts against the company at that time. Prior to the date of the agreed decree the Tobin Oil Company was, by an order of the court, required to pay into the registry of the court, or into the First National Bank, the dividends due on the 100 shares of stock in controversy, which amounted to the sum of $16,039.15. The company obeyed the order by depositing that amount in said bank, and that money was on hand when the agreed judgment referred to was entered. There seems to have been no oil on hand at that time. On December 19, 1904, the books of the oil company showed a balance to its credit of $18,355.04, out of which a dividend of $11,550 was declared, one-half of which was payable to A. C. Allen on the 100 shares of stock held by him under the trust impressed by the decree aforementioned. At its close of business, on January 28, 1905, the books of the Tobin Oil Company had on hand $8,649.93, and there was also then due it from the Guffy Company for oil about $200. The $16,039.15, placed in the bank under the direction of the court, and one-half of the dividend of $11,550 declared by the company, was paid to Allen, and prorated

Hutcheson receiving his pro rata share thereof. This was all the money he ever received from Allen, or any one else, upon the 100 shares of stock held by him under the decree charged with the trust thereby impressed thereon. L. F. Benckenstein acted as the president of the J. J. Tobin Oil Company on November 7, 1904, claiming to have been elected on August 13th of that year. At the same time T. H. Bass claims to have been elected secretary and treasurer of the company, and held said position from then until the suit was brought.

When this suit was instituted, L. F. Benckenstein, Mally Eastham, T. H. Bass, A. C. Allen, and John Lovejoy were acting as the directors of the oil company. Benckenstein and Eastham claim to have been elected members of the board of directors of the company on August 1, 1904, and T. H. Bass on August 19, 1904, and A. C. Allen and John Lovejoy on January 28, 1905. But it appears from the minutes of the proceedings on those dates that each of them was elected by the board of directors, instead of by the stockholders of the company, as provided by its charter. On the same day 99 of the shares of the stock covered by the decree above referred to were issued to A. C. Allen, and the other share to John Lovejoy, and registered on the books of the company in their names. On January 28, 1905, the sum of $1,250 apiece was voted to L. F. Benckenstein and T. H. Bass for salaries from August to February past, also resolutions were passed to buy one-tenth of an acre of land at Humble and 10 acres near Dayton, and to pay therefor $2,500. All these resolutions were passed by the votes of Benckenstein, Bass, and Lovejoy, though Allen was present, but not voting. Both Lovejoy and Allen were owners in common with S. Brown of the land so purchased, Allen having bought the land subsequent to May 7, 1904, for a much less price than it was sold to the Tobin Oil Company, and afterwards made Brown a deed to it. The money thus voted to Benckenstein and Bass by themselves was received by them, and the price of the land by Brown and his co-owners. The purported resolutions, thus appropriating this money of the company, were passed at a meeting purporting to be of its board of directors, held in the city of Beaumont, Jefferson county, instead of at its office and place of business, at Sour Lake, Hardin county, Tex. After this the remainder of the money, $7,399.61, was spent in boring a well for oil on the one-tenth of an acre at Humble purchased under and by virtue of said resolutions. No oil was obtained by this expenditure, which was made at the instance of Benckenstein, Bass, Allen, and Lovejoy, without the consent of its board of directors, and without Hutcheson's knowledge, and against his protest, made to Allen as soon as he heard of it. In the meantime the wells of the company penses of operating them. Upon the expenditure of the $7,399.61 in the fruitless effort to obtain oil at Humble, the company's resources were entirely consumed and it ceased to do business, and, in effect, became a bankrupt and ceased to pay its annual corporation tax from that time.

On these undisputed facts, substantially alleged in his second amended original petition, J. C. Hutcheson brought suit against A. C. Allen, T. H. Bass, L. Benckenstein, and the J. J. Tobin Oil Company, to recover of them the balance due him, as charged by the decree of May 7, 1904, on the 100 shares of stock held in trust by Allen for its payment. Allen denied any breach of the trust imposed upon him by the decree, or failure of his duty as a member of the board of directors to plaintiff, or of any participation in the acts of the other members of the board, which resulted in plaintiff's loss of the money claimed by him under said decree of the district court on the 100 shares of stock charged in his (Allen's) hands with its payment. Allen also filed a cross-bill interpleading other parties. The defendants Bass and Benckenstein interposed general and special exceptions to the plaintiff's petition, pleaded a general denial, and specially that each of them were duly elected members of the board of directors of the company; that they acquired in due course of business, in open market, for a valuable consideration, 100 shares of the capital stock of the oil company, which they then owned, that since their election as members of said board, each, in conjunction with its other members, has legitimately applied the income and profits of the company to the prosecution of its business and purposes, as authorized by its charter, and that neither of them has in any manner conspired with Allen, or any other person, to divert the assets of the corporation to any other purpose than its legitimate business, or in any manner sought to divert from plaintiff any dividends accruing to him or any other person, but, on the contrary, has faithfully applied to those entitled thereto all dividends which have accrued upon stock of said company.

The case was tried before a jury, whom the court instructed as follows: "The uncontroverted evidence in this case shows that, on the 28th day of January, 1905, the Tobin Oil Company had on hand $8,642.93, and that thereafter it invested in the boring of wells, in the Humble oil field, $7,399.61. You are further instructed that the resolution of the board of directors of the Tobin Oil Company, of January 28, 1905, voting to Bass and Benckenstein $2,500, and to S. Brown $2,500, for the use of Brown, Lovejoy, and Allen on a purchase of land, was illegal and void for the reason that the directors voting said amounts were personally interested therein; and you are further instructed that the purchase of the one-quarter of an acre of land in the Humble oil field, upon which they afterwards bored for oil, for $2,500, was made without any resolution or authority of the board of directors so to do; and you are further instructed that the subsequent expenditure of $7,399.61, in boring the oil well in the Humble field, was done without any authority of the board of directors of said company, and that the amount of money so expended was a complete loss. These dealings being without authority, without reference to whether they constituted actual fraud, did, at least, constitute constructive fraud, and that the defendants are liable therefor to the plaintiff for any injury occasioned him thereby; and you are further instructed that the plaintiff's proportion of the amount so expended amounted to $2,293. You are therefore instructed to return a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, against all of the defendants, for $2,293. You are further instructed to find against the defendant A. C. Allen on his cross-action against the defendants Bass and Benckenstein." A verdict was returned in accordance with the charge, and upon it the court rendered judgment in favor of J. C. Hutcheson against A. C. Allen, T. H. Bass, and L. F. Benckenstein and the J. J. Tobin Oil Company for the sum of $2,293, together with interest from its date at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. From the judgment all the parties against whom it was rendered sued out this writ of error; but it is prosecuted by A. C. Allen alone, none other of the parties having filed a brief in this court.

It is complained that the court erred in giving the peremptory charge above quoted. If the foregoing undisputed facts do not conclusively show a fraudulent conspiracy on the part of defendants to deprive the plaintiff of the balance of his money with which the decree charged the 100 shares of stock, and imposed upon the J. J. Tobin Oil Company the duty of paying out of the dividends and earnings to Allen, to be paid by him as directed, they at least establish such constructive fraud as make them all liable to plaintiff for his pro rata share of the money earned by the corporation, and wrongfully appropriated, against the express commands of the decree, for back salaries, bits of land, and frittered away in proudly boring for oil in Humble fields. If it should be conceded that men can constitute themselves members of a board of directors of a corporation at so-called meetings of such a board, held in a city other than where its charter fixes its general office and place of business, and contrary to the law and the express provisions of its charter, which provide its directors shall be elected by its stockholders at a stockholders' meeting, it cannot be said that its directors can at such a meeting legally appropriate to themselves money of the company by their own vote, or that a director can in such manner make a sale in which he is interested to the corporation. A fortiori can this not be done where the money is earnings of the corporation, expressly appropriated by a decree of the court against the corporation, of which its board of directors are bound to take notice, to the payment of a debt due another party, as is indisputably shown by the evidence in this case. Nor can the one, on whom the duty of receiving the money from the corporation and distributing it among those entitled to it was imposed by the decree, stand idly by with folded arms while he sees the money thus appropriated, diverted from the purposes for which it was decreed, squandered and frittered away by the wrongful actions of those claiming to be the board of directors and managers of the corporation, and say, "I wash my hands of the whole matter." But when he sees, knows, or has reasonable grounds to believe that the money is being, or is about to be, so diverted, it is his bounden duty to invoke the power of the court which imposed the trust upon him, to prevent the dissipation of the fund, and have it paid him in order that he may discharge his duties as trustee to the beneficiaries. The undisputed facts in this case conclusively show that, if he did not actively participate in the diversion and misappropriation of the money, the defendant Allen knew, or had good reason to know, that it was being done, and that he failed to take any steps whatever to protect the beneficiaries of his trust, one of whom was the plaintiff in this case.

The judgment, as is shown by the facts, is so clearly just in the eye of equity that we deem it unnecessary to say more.

Affirmed.

Appeal from District Court, Navarro County; H. B. Daviss, Judge.

Action by Thomas T. Reid against J. T. Stockard. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. R. Calloway, R. S. Neblett, and W. W. Ballew, for appellant. W. J. Weavor, for appellee.

TALBOT, J. This suit was instituted by Thomas T. Reid, appellee, against J. T. Stockard, appellant, to enjoin and restrain him from engaging in the business of a retail liquor dealer in Navarro county, and from selling intoxicating liquor in violation of the local option law in Navarro county, and to restrain and enjoin him from storing intoxicating liquor in a certain house belonging to appellee and rented by appellant, and from using such house for that purpose.

The petition alleged, in substance, that the plaintiff, at the time of the presentation of his petition, was the owner, in fee simple, of the house and building situated on the corner of Tenth street and East Third avenue, in the city of Corsicana, Navarro county, Tex., and has owned said property for many years prior thereto; that the defendant, Stockard, had, before and at the time of the filing of this suit, the possession, management, and control of said property, and had stored and was keeping intoxicating liquors in said house and building for the purpose of selling the same; that said defendant has threatened, and is about, to use said house and building for the purpose of selling intoxicating liquors therein, and of engaging in and pursuing the occupation and business of a liquor dealer in said county in violation of law; that on the 15th day of June, 1907, an election was held by the qualified voters of Navarro county, Tex., under and by the authority of an order of the commissioners' court of said county, to determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors in said county should be prohibited by law, and that a majority of the legal votes cast in said election were for prohibition, and that said election resulted in absolutely prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within said county; that the result of said election has been duly declared and published in the manner and form, and for the length of time, required by law, and that the local option law is in full force and effect in said county, by reason of the result of said election; that, if the defendant is permitted to engage in and pursue the business of selling intoxicating liquors within the house and building above described, he will not only thereby create and promote a public nuisance, but the private interest and property of plaintiff will be materially injured; that plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law, but under chapters 77 and 81, pp. 156, 166, of the General Laws of the state of Texas, enacted by the Thirtieth Legislature, this plaintiff is entitled to a writ of injunction restraining defendant from using, or threatening to use, such house, premises, and building, with the intent to store, keep, sell, or dispense intoxicating liquors, or for the purpose of engaging in the business of the sale of intoxicating liquors therein in violation of law. The defendant answered, admitting that the election to determine whether or not the sale of intoxicating liquors should be prohibited in Navarro county was held as charged in plaintiff's petition, but averred that said election resulted against prohibition; that the commissioners' court of Navarro county, Tex., in obedience to article 3390 of the Revised Civil Statutes of 1895, met in special session on the 26th of June, 1907, for the purpose of counting the votes and declaring the result of said election, and declared the result of said election to be against prohibition, and published the result thereof as required by law; that thereafter, and within 30 days from the date the result of said election was declared to be against prohibition, L. E. McCormick and other citizens of Navarro county, Tex., filed a contest of said election in the district court of Navarro county, against C. L. Jester, county judge, and C. L. Knox, county attorney, of Navarro county, Tex., and by amended petition under Acts 1907, p. 447, c. 8, entitled, "Election Contest," relating to contests arising under the local option law; that when said contest was heard in the district court of Navarro county, and upon final hearing, the district judge sustained the election, and declared that a majority of the legal voters of Navarro county, Tex., in said election held on the 15th of June, 1907, had cast their votes against prohibition; that thereafter, and within the time provided by law, the contestants appealed said case to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fifth Supreme Judicial District of Texas at Dallas, Tex.; that said Court of Civil Appeals, upon hearing, reversed and rendered the decision of the district court of Navarro county, and held that a majority of the votes cast at said election were in favor of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in said Navarro county, and said Court of Civil Appeals reversed and rendered said cause, and ordered the commissioners' court of Navarro county to declare the result of said election to be in favor of prohibition; that the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals was void, because under article 3397 said court had no power to reverse and render an election contest, and could only declare the election void and order a new election; that said election was void because notices thereof were in fact never posted by the clerk of the county court of Navarro county, nor under his authority, save one, neither for the time nor in the manner required by law; that notices at most were posted only by a volunteer, and that his act was repudiated and denied by the county clerk. Defendant further alleged that the act of the Thirtieth Legislature, approved by the Governor on the 14th of May, 1907, relating to contests of local option elections, which undertakes to prohibit appellant from inquiring into the validity of the local option election, is unconstitutional and void: (1) Because the subject of legislation therein was passed at a special session, and was never submitted to the Legislature by proclamation of the Governor convening the special session, nor in any message from the Governor; (2) said act of the Legislature is contrary to the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, in that it undertakes to deprive appellant of the right to show that the prohibition law is not in force in Navarro county, and denies him his day in court, and deprives him of the rights, privileges, and immunities guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States by article 5 and said fourteenth amendment. The district judge in chambers heard the said petition, answer, and agreed statement of facts, and granted a temporary writ of injunction, holding that the act of 1907 was valid and constitutional, and that the election held on June 15, 1907, was valid and binding upon appellant, and that the result of the same cannot now be questioned, and that appellant can show no defense which would make said election void.

The first proposition presented and urged in this court is that the court below erred in holding the act of the Thirtieth Legislature, passed at its special session and approved May 14, 1907, relating to the contest of local option elections, valid, constitutional, and binding, for that said act is contrary to section 40, art. 3, of the Constitution of this state, because it relates to the contest of prohibition elections, and not to the procedure in a civil or criminal trial, and such legislation was not designated in the proclamation of the Governor convening said special session, nor presented by the Governor in any message to the Legislature. The act in question was passed at the special session of the Legislature convened by the Governor on the 13th day of April, 1907. The first paragraph or clause of the proclamation relating to the purposes for which this special session was called is as follows: "To enact adequate laws simplifying the procedure in both civil and criminal trials in the courts of this state, and for such reforms as may be practicable in our jury system." On the 16th day of April, 1907, the Governor sent to the Legislature a message, in which he said: "Upon the subject of simplifying the procedure in both civil and criminal trials, and also upon the needed reforms in our jury system, I again call your attention to the importance of these reforms, both to the counties and state and to the people who bear the burden of a system almost bewildering in its meshwork of technical absurdities. I cannot too strongly urge upon the Legislature the necessity for the reforms demanded." The foregoing excerpt from the Governor's proclamation and message contains, in our opinion, all that relates to the subject of the legislation under consideration, and it is agreed by counsel that, if nothing in the proclamation or message of the Governor embraces or includes the subject-matter of said act, then the same is unconstitutional and void under section 40, art. 3, of the Constitution of Texas. Section 40, art. 3, of the Constitution is as follows: "When the Legislature shall be convened in a special session, there shall be no legislation upon subjects other than those designated in the proclamation of the Governor calling such session or presented to them by the Governor; and no such session shall be of longer duration than thirty days."

It has been held by the courts of this state, and of other states of high authority, in effect, that an act passed by the Legislature and signed by the presiding officers of each house, as provided by the Constitution, and which has been approved by the Governor, affords conclusive evidence that it was passed according to the Constitution, and that it is not competent for the courts to go behind the attestation and look to the journals of the houses, or receive other evidence to show the contrary. Williams v. Taylor, 83 Tex. 667, 19 S. W. 156; Railway Co. v. Hearne, 32 Tex. 547; Blessing v. Galveston, 42 Tex. 641; Usener v. State, 8 Tex. App. 177; Ex parte Tipton, 28 Tex. App. 438, 13 S. W. 610, 8 L. R. A. 326; Railroad Co. v. Governor, 23 Mo. 353, 66 Am. Dec. 673; State v. Young, 32 N. J. Law, 29. In these cases, however, it was sought to defeat the law because not passed according to the procedure and method prescribed by the Constitution, and not because of a want of jurisdiction or authority of the Legislature to pass the law. In the case of Baldwin v. State, 21 Tex. App. 591, 3 S. W. 109, it was contended that the act of the Seventeenth Legislature (Laws 1882, p. 18, c. 17) levying an occupation tax upon persons engaged in the sale of the Illustrated Police News, Police Gazette, etc., passed at its special session, was unconstitutional on the ground that the Governor did not, by his proclamation convening said Legislature in special session, nor by any other means, designate or present it to said Legislature as a subject for legislation. This question was left undetermined by the Court of Appeals for the reason that the court was of the opinion that the proclamation of the Governor convening the Legislature conferred authority to enact the law. It was said, however, that, whether a court, even in such a case, could go behind a statute which was valid upon its face and inquire into the particular authority by virtue of which it was enacted was a question well worthy of serious consideration. But in the case of Manor Casino et al v. State (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 769, the act called in question was passed at a special session of the Legislature, and was upon a subject not embraced in either the proclamation of the Governor or any message sent to it during its session, and it was held by the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third District that section 40, art. 3, of the Constitution was clearly mandatory and a limitation upon the authority of the Legislature in a special session to pass laws, and that an act passed violative thereof was void. That case was sought to be distinguished from the case of Williams v. Taylor, supra, and other cases to the same effect, upon the ground that it involved the want of jurisdiction and authority in the Legislature to act at all, whereas the manner of the exercise of authority after jurisdiction had attached was involved in the Williams-Taylor Case, and cases of similar import. As in the case of Baldwin v. State, supra, we find it unnecessary to a proper disposition of this case to decide the question, and shall leave it undetermined until a case arises in which it becomes necessary to do so. We are of the opinion that the language, "To enact adequate laws simplifying the procedure in both civil and criminal trials in the courts of this state," contained in the proclamation of the Governor convening the Thirtieth Legislature in special session, was sufficient, under section 40, art. 3, of the Constitution, to confer authority upon the Legislature to enact the law attacked in this proceeding.

Our attention has been called by counsel for appellant to the decisions of this state holding that a proceeding to contest an election is not a "suit, complaint, or plea" within the meaning of the Constitution, and an ingenious argument is made to the effect that the language of the proclamation under consideration should be construed in the light of those decisions, and, when so construed, it must be held that said language does not embrace the subject dealt with by the Legislature in the act in question, and that said act is condemned and prohibited by the section of the Constitution quoted. We do not concur in this view of the matter. In the cases in which it was held that the contest of an election was not a suit, complaint, or plea in the sense in which those words are used in the Constitution, the court was considering the question, whether or not the district court had jurisdiction to hear and determine such a contest, and such holding seems to have been predicated upon that provision of the Constitution conferring jurisdiction upon the district court of suits, complaints, or pleas wherein the matter in controversy is valued at, or amounts to, $500, exclusive of interest, and the fact that, as the primary and direct purpose and effect of the contest of an election was simply to determine the legality and fairness of the election, and involved a political or extrajudicial question to be regulated under the Constitution by the political authority of the state, such contest lacked the necessary elements of a suit, complaint, or plea within the meaning of the Constitution, and did not come within "either the law or equity jurisdiction of any of our courts." But by article 3397 of our statute, passed in view of the constitutional amendment, a proceeding to contest an election is cognizable before the district court, and rules of procedure governing its trial are provided; and, while it may not by reason of said statute have lost its distinctive character as a political proceeding, yet it must be admitted, we think, that the trial thereof is a "civil trial," within the contemplation and meaning of the language as used in the Governor's proclamation. The procedure, as provided by the statute referred to, and the conduct of the trial in such a case, with the exception that a jury is not allowed, if not identically the same, is very similar to that governing the trials of ordinary civil suits in this state, and the language used by the Governor comprehends within its meaning all civil trials. That it was so understood and construed by the Legislature and Governor is evidenced by the passage of the act by the Legislature and its approval by the Governor. The fact that the Governor called the attention of the Legislature in his message more specifically to other reforms suggested in the procedure in civil and criminal trials than to the subject-matter of said act does not, in our opinion, militate against the views we have expressed. It was not necessary for the Governor in his proclamation or message to suggest the specific legislation desired, and this fact seems to have been recognized by him, for he expressly stated in his message that he did not intend, by recommending certain legislation upon subjects specifically named in his message, to suggest a limit to the remedies which the Legislature might in their wisdom devise. In Railroad Co. v. Riblet, 66 Pa. 164, 5 Am. Rep. 360, it is said: "If the act itself is within the scope of legislative authority, it must stand;" that "nothing but a clear violation of the Constitution, a clear usurpation of power prohibited, will justify the judicial department in pronouncing an act of the legislative department unconstitutional and void." We are of opinion that a fair, reasonable, and correct construction of the proclamation authorized the legislation in question.

The second proposition contended for by appellant is that the act of the Thirtieth Legislature under consideration violates the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States and article 5 of said Constitution, in that it undertakes to make an election held and the result declared by the commissioners' court binding upon appellant, unless he contests the same, and makes the contest of an election, to which he was not a party, binding upon him; that any statute which undertakes to condemn a man and deprive him of life, liberty, or property without a hearing violates the law of the land and the Constitution of the United States in the particulars pointed out. It has been often held that the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors within any prescribed territory of this state is clearly the lawful exercise of its police powers; that a statute, if all persons brought under its influence are treated alike under the same condition, does not, within the contemplation of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States referred to in appellant's proposition, deprive such persons of their property or property rights without due course of law. If the local option election held in Navarro county June 15, 1907, resulted in favor of prohibition, and we have held that it did (McCormick v. Jester [Tex. Civ. App.] 115 S. W. 278), and the commissioners' court of that county had at the time of the institution of this suit so declared, as required by the statute, which is not here denied, appellant could not thereafter legally engage in the sale of intoxicating liquors in that county. That the prohibition of such sales did not have the effect to imperil any pecuniary right of appellant or deprive him of any property is well settled. Therefore, the effect of declaring that the election had carried in favor of local option having deprived appellant of no pecuniary right, the question became as to him merely a political one, and the act of the Thirtieth Legislature, making an election held and the result declared by the commissioners' court binding unless contested within the time prescribed, and making the result of a contest of such election to which appellant was not a party binding upon him, is in no wise contrary to, or violative of, the fifth or fourteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States. The local option election involved in this case was contested by L. E. McCormick and nine other citizens of Navarro county. The contestees were C. L. Jester and C. L. Knox, county judge and county attorney, respectively, of said county. The contest was originally filed July 26, 1907, and on the 31st day of August, 1907, and within 60 days from the taking effect of the act of the Thirtieth Legislature, passed May 14, 1907, the same contestants filed a second suit against the same parties, contesting the election under said act on substantially the same grounds set up in the first suit. These suits were afterwards, upon motion of the contestants, consolidated. A trial of the consolidated suits in the district court resulted in a judgment for the contestees, to the effect that said election resulted against prohibition. Upon appeal to this court it was held that the election resulted in favor of prohibition by a majority of 11 votes, and the judgment of the district court was reversed, and judgment rendered in favor of contestants. McCormick v. Jester (Tex. Civ. App.) 115 S. W. 278. This judgment was certified to the commissioners' court of Navarro county, and in obedience thereto that court declared the result of the local option election to be in favor of prohibition. The appellant's answer filed in this suit is, in effect, an attempt on his part to again contest the legality of said election. This we hold he cannot do. The result of the contest instituted by McCormick against Jester and others by the provisions of the act of 1907, which act we have held to be constitutional, finally settled all questions relating to the validity of said election, and is binding upon appellant.

In Hardy v. State, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 420, 107 S. W. 547, the appellant was charged with violating the local option law. Upon the trial in the lower court, more than 60 days after the taking effect of the act of the Thirtieth Legislature, passed May 14, 1907, he objected to the introduction of the order of election because of certain irregularities therein, and offered to prove that the county clerk did not at any time post any notices of the local option election. The objections to the order of election were overruled, and the testimony offered to show that the notices of election had not been posted by the clerk excluded. On appeal it was held by the Court of Criminal Appeals of this state that the action of the trial court was correct. In discussing the matter, Judge Brooks, speaking for the court, says: "Said act (passed May 14, 1907) provides that contests of elections that had theretofore been had must be contested within 60 days from the taking effect of said law, and not otherwise. The matters complained of would be mere irregularities at best, and this act makes valid and noncontestable anything pertaining to irregularities in the adoption of the local option law. The act itself provides that we shall conclusively presume that said election as held was valid in all things and binding upon all courts. We accordingly hold that said act is valid, and applies to all local option elections, and it clearly applies in this case."

What has been said disposes of the controlling questions in the case, and other questions raised need not be considered.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

Ex parte BRADY. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 13, 1909.) Original application by J. H. Brady for writ of habeas corpus. Relator remanded to custody. B. E. Moore, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. This is an original application for writ of habeas corpus, involving the constitutionality of Acts 30th Leg. p. 278, c. 144, known as the "Wild Game Law." Relator was arrested for offering for sale and selling wild ducks after same had been killed in Texas. This same question was reviewed by the court in Ex parte Blardone, 115 S. W. 838, where we held the law constitutional. We see no reason for changing our decision. Relator is accordingly remanded to custody.

BROWN v. STATE. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Dec. 9, 1908. Rehearings Denied June 23, and Oct. 13, 1909.) Appeal from Tarrant County Court; R. F. Milam, Judge. Bud Brown was convicted of violating the election law, and he appeals. Affirmed. McCart, Bowlin & McCart and McLean & Scott, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of violating the Terrell election law by advancing money to pay poll tax, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $300 and 60 days' imprisonment in the county jail. The question involved in this record was passed upon by us in the case of Solon v. State (decided at the recent Austin term of this court) 114 S. W. 849. We have had no reason to change our opinion there expressed as to the law of that case. Upon the authority of that case, the judgment herein is in all things affirmed.

DODD v. STATE. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. June 23, 1909. Rehearing Denied Oct. 6, 1909.) Appeal from Hill County Court; Horton B. Porter, Judge. M. E. Dodd was convicted of crime, and appeals. Affirmed. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant prosecutes this appeal, but fails to send up a statement of the facts or any bills of exceptions. There being no error manifest of record, or presented, that would require a reversal, the judgment is affirmed.

DODD v. STATE. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. June 23, 1909. Rehearing Denied Oct. 6, 1909.) Appeal from Hill County Court; Horton B. Porter, Judge. M. E. Dodd was convicted of an offense, and he appeals. Affirmed. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. This record is before us without a statement of facts or bills of exceptions. There is nothing, therefore, for this court to review. As the record presents the appeal, the judgment will be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

BROWN v. WALLIS. (Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. May 22, 1909. Rehearing Denied June 19, 1909.) Appeal from District Court, Wichita County; A. H. Carrigan, Judge. Action by J. S. Wallis against R. J. Brown. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed. Wolfe, Hare & Maxey and L. H. Mathis, for appellant. R. E. Taylor, W. T. Allen, J. H. Barwise, Jr., and J. T. Montgomery, for appellee.

SPEER, J. This is the second appeal in this case (see 101 S. W. 1068, 1070), and the third growing out of the same regrettable occurrence. In the companion case of King v. Brown, 93 S. W. 1017, the facts are fully stated, and in that opinion this court indicated its views of the law governing. Later, in a certified question in this case on the former appeal (101 S. W. 1068), these views were somewhat amplified; but the Supreme Court has differed from us on the law points involved (King v. Brown, 100 Tex. 109, 94 S. W. 328), and it is in accordance with the views of that court, rather than our own, that the present appeal must be decided. The facts developed on the last trial of this case are substantially the same as in the King-Brown Case, and the questions of law raised are for the most part disposed of in that opinion. No useful purpose would be served in discussing them in detail. We believe the last trial was had in accordance with the opinion of the Supreme Court, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

LIVELY et al. v. MISSOURI, K. & T. RY. CO. OF TEXAS. (Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Oct. 30, 1909.) Appeal from District Court, Dallas County; T. F. Nash, Judge. Action by the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas against Hiram F. Lively and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed, on decision of Supreme Court (120 S. W. 852) in answer to certified questions. R. V. Davidson, Atty. Gen., Claud Pollard, Asst. Atty. Gen., Dwight L. Lewelling, Co. Atty., and J. Lawson Goggans, for appellants. Coke, Miller & Coke, Thomas & Rhea, and A. N. McKnight, for appellee.

TALBOT, J. This suit was instituted by the appellee, Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas, against Hiram F. Lively, as county judge, and the county commissioners of Dallas county, Tex., constituting the board of equalization of said county, and Henry Jones, tax collector of Dallas county, to set aside alleged acts of said board of equalization and to enjoin the said tax collector from collecting or attempting to collect a portion of the tax upon the intangible assets of appellee. The petition alleged, in substance, that the state tax board, acting under an act of the Thirtieth Legislature, being chapter 17, p. 469, of the General Laws of the First Called Session, fixed, determined, and declared the value of its intangible assets at the full and fair market value thereof, and more than the full and fair market value of the same, and so apportioned to said county said assets, and that the tax assessor of said county has placed, set down, and listed said intangible assets upon the tax rolls of said county at the value fixed, determined, declared, and certified by the state tax board, and that the commissioners' court of said county, sitting as a board of equalization, approved the roll of the tax assessor, which contained the intangible assets of appellee as apportioned to said county at the full and fair market value thereof, etc.; that the property of taxpayers generally throughout the county for the year 1907, and for several years prior thereto, had been assessed, equalized, and placed on the tax rolls for taxing purposes at not exceeding 50 per cent. of its value; that said undervaluation of property generally was by virtue of a fixed and established custom, usage, design, and intention; that the act of the board of equalization in so equalizing, or purporting to equalize, the property to said county, and in approving the lists of the tax assessor containing the intangible assets at full value, was intentional, arbitrary, and fraudulent, and plaintiff was by said act unjustly, arbitrarily, and illegally discriminated against; that the plaintiff tendered to the defendant Henry W. Jones, tax collector of Dallas county, the sum of $4,382.08 in full of all state and county taxes justly due by it in said county for the year 1907 on its tangible property therein, which said sum was received and accepted by the said tax collector in satisfaction of said taxes on plaintiff's tangible property; that appellee tendered to the tax collector of Dallas county, Tex., the taxes upon its intangible assets for said county at 50 per cent. of the value of same, which amount was accepted by the tax collector and receipted for on account, and the injunction sought was to restrain the collection of the remaining taxes upon 50 per cent. of the value of said intangible assets. The petition does not allege that the plaintiff sought before the board of equalization of Dallas county to have the value of its intangible assets reduced, or to have advanced the valuation of all other property in the county to its true value in money; nor does said petition show any excuse for plaintiff's failure to do so. The appellants demurred generally and specially to appellee's petition, and the demurrers were overruled. The case was submitted to the court without a jury upon an agreed statement of facts, from which it appears that property generally in the county had been assessed and equalized for taxation at a general average of 66⅔ per cent. of its value, and that the other material allegations of plaintiff's petition were established. The appellee having tendered in court the difference between the 50 per cent. and the 66⅔ per cent., the court rendered judgment for the appellee, setting aside the act of the board of equalization of Dallas county in equalizing the value of the intangible assets of appellee at full value, and restraining the tax collector of the county from collecting or attempting to collect from the appellee any tax upon its intangible assets in excess of the 66⅔ per cent. tendered. From this judgment, appellants appealed.

The controlling questions raised by the assignments of error are: "Is the act of the Thirtieth Legislature, passed at its called session in 1907, approved May 16, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 469), and amending an act of the Twenty-Ninth Legislature, approved April 17, 1905, providing for the taxing of the intangible assets of certain corporations, and especially sections 16 and 17 of said first-mentioned act, repugnant to or violative of article 8, § 18, of the Constitution of Texas?" "Does the act of the Legislature in question violate article 8, § 1, of the Constitution of Texas, that taxation shall be equal and uniform?" "The plaintiff having failed to seek relief from the board of equalization, by asking for a reduction in the valuation of its intangible assets or for an increase in the valuation placed on other property generally, can it maintain an action to enjoin the collection of a portion of the tax upon its intangible assets? Or, in other words, did appellee have a full, complete, and adequate remedy at law?" "Was plaintiff entitled to the relief sought and obtained by the judgment of the district court, under the facts stated, on the ground that its intangible assets had been assessed at their full and fair market value or real value, while other property of Dallas county was generally assessed by the tax assessor of said county and approved by the commissioners' court of said county, sitting as a board of equalization, at less than its full value, in disobedience to the statute?" "If the state tax board fixed, determined, and assessed plaintiff's intangible assets at their full and fair market value, or real value, and so certified such valuation to the tax assessor of Dallas county, and other property generally in Dallas county was intentionally and in pursuance of a fixed and established custom and usage valued and assessed for taxation by the local assessing officers of said county at less than its full and fair market value, or real value, was appellee entitled to maintain this suit and obtain the relief sought?" "Under the facts stated, did the trial court err in rendering judgment in favor of the plaintiff perpetuating the injunction in this case and granting to it the relief sought?" The foregoing questions were by this court certified to the Supreme Court for adjudication, and the first two were by the Supreme Court answered in the negative, and the others favorable to appellee's contention; the court holding that, under the facts of the case, the trial court did not err in rendering judgment in favor of plaintiff, perpetuating the injunction theretofore granted and awarding to the plaintiff the relief sought by it. A full statement of the facts upon which a decision of the questions turned and an able and exhaustive discussion of them will be found in the opinion of the Supreme Court, published in 120 S. W. 852, and a repetition of the facts here and a further discussion of the said questions by this court would be superfluous. It is sufficient to say that we adopt the conclusions of the Supreme Court, as shown in the opinion to which we have referred. This requires an affirmance of the judgment of the court below; and it is accordingly so ordered. Affirmed.

I. NATURE AND REQUISITES.

(A) Acquisition of Rights by Prescription in General.

§ 4. Since January, 1893, limitation may run against the commonwealth, as expressly provided by Ky. St. § 2523 (Russell's St. § 240); Gen. St. c. 71, art. 3, § 10.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 13. One who had never been in possession of the land, nor paid taxes on it, held not entitled to maintain trespass to try title against one who had paid taxes for 16 years, and held it adversely for 5 years.—Kirby v. Boaz (Tex. Civ. App.) 223.

(B) Actual Possession.

§ 14. Claiming title to a strip of land, without actual inclosure or occupancy for 15 years, held not to give title by adverse possession.—Paducah Cooperage Co. v. Paducah Veneer & Lumber Co. (Ky.) 986.

§ 19. Actual possession may be acquired, either by physical inclosure of the whole boundary or of a part, under a claim of title to the whole, if no one else asserts title to any part on which claimant has so entered.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

(C) Visible and Notorious Possession.

§ 30. Notoriety must be added to adverse possession before it can ripen into a title by limitation.—Johnson & Burr v. Elder (Ark.) 1066.

§ 30. An alleged tenant's attornment to plaintiff held not of sufficient notoriety to extend his possession of a part of the land to the entire tract claimed by plaintiff under a void tax deed.—Johnson & Burr v. Elder (Ark.) 1066.

(E) Duration and Continuity of Possession.

§ 44. The putting of stock on land in the summer or hogs in the fall and winter when there was mast, was not such continuous possession as was required to acquire title by adverse possession.—Ashcraft v. Courtney (Ky.) 625.

§ 44. To acquire title by adverse possession, the possession must be such as to give a cause of action for every moment of the fifteen years, and, if the possession is broken, the time must be counted from the break, and not from the to have been continuous.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 47. The possession of land by the vendee is not the possession of his vendor as against one who enters possession after the sale.—Kirby v. Boaz (Tex. Civ. App.) 223.

§ 57. Evidence held insufficient to show continuity of possession for the period of limitations so as to vest title in plaintiffs by adverse possession.—Ashcraft v. Courtney (Ky.) 625.

(F) Hostile Character of Possession.

§ 62. The widow's right to the occupancy of the messuages and plantation held incidental to her occupancy of her deceased husband's mansion house, and without the latter she has no right to the former, and, having no quarantine, there is nothing to prevent limitations from running when she takes possession.—Givens v. Ott (Mo.) 23.

§ 63. Where possession of real estate is hostile to any claim of right by a former owner, it sets the statute of limitation running, though the one in possession looks to the former owner for a conveyance.—New Domain Oil & Gas Co. v. Gaffney Oil Co. (Ky.) 699.

§ 63. Where a grantee, under an executory contract for the sale of land, looks to his grantor for title, he cannot, as a general rule, claim that his possession was adverse to the grantor; but, where the grantee has paid for the land, his claim is hostile to any claim of the grantor.—New Domain Oil & Gas Co. v. Gaffney Oil Co. (Ky.) 699.

§ 65. Occupancy by the grantor of plaintiff's alleged tenant, of an area beyond his boundary lines for 26 years, held to constitute a complete investiture of title in such grantor by adverse possession.—Johnson & Burr v. Elder (Ark.) 1066.

§ 68. One on whose possession of land title by adverse possession is based must be shown to have claimed to own the land at the time.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 70. A verbal sale of land and adverse possession under it held to vest a person with a good possessory title.—French v. Branger (Ky.) 437.

§ 70. A purchaser under a parol sale of land held to acquire title by limitation, though the sale is void under the statute of frauds.—New Domain Oil & Gas Co. v. Gaffney Oil Co. (Ky.) 699.

§ 71. Where defendant took no title under certain deeds, they were available as color of title only to the land or interest within their terms.—Kimbell v. Powell (Tex. Civ. App.) 541.

§ 71. A grantee in a deed held to have acquired a valid title to the entire tract by adverse possession.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

§ 71. A quitclaim deed is sufficient color of title to support a claim under the 5-year statute of limitations.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

II. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

(A) Extent of Possession.

§ 96. Evidence held to show that the adverse claimant to land was a trespasser not claiming to any well-defined boundary, and hence not to support a possessory title.—Le Moyne v. Roundtree (Ky.) 960.

§ 96. If an entrant goes on a boundary under a junior patent, entirely or partly within a senior grant or survey, he will be deemed in actual possession only of that actually inclosed, if the owner of the senior grant is then in actual possession, or if he be not, but enters before the junior patentee ripens title by adverse possession, the latter will be restricted to his actual close.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 98. One entering under paper title may look to it as showing extent of his claim and possession; or, if he enter without a paper claiming to a marked boundary, that fact may be shown as indicating the extent of possession.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 100. Occupation of a part of the land in controversy by plaintiff's alleged tenant under a void lease held insufficient to confer title to the whole tract on plaintiff by adverse possession.—Johnson & Burr v. Elder (Ark.) 1066.

§ 100. Where one enters under a deed, not from the true owner, and claims adversely, his deed is evidence of the extent and character of the possession, though not of title.—New Domain Oil & Gas Co. v. Gaffney Oil Co. (Ky.) 699.

§ 100. The intention of one entering on land in the exercise of ownership held an element in determining the legal effect of his act.—New Domain Oil & Gas Co. v. Gaffney Oil Co. (Ky.) 699.

§ 100. A purchaser under a parol purchase held to acquire title to the whole tract by adverse possession.—New Domain Oil & Gas Co. v. Gaffney Oil Co. (Ky.) 699.

§ 100. One entering without a deed on a boundary plainly marked, with the intention of reducing the whole to his possession, held to reduce the whole to his actual possession.—New Domain Oil & Gas Co. v. Gaffney Oil Co. (Ky.) 699.

§ 100. If one enters under paper title, it may be looked to as showing extent of his claim and possession; or, if he enter without a paper, claiming to a marked boundary, that fact may be shown as indicating the extent of possession.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 100. Actual possession may be acquired, either by physical inclosure of the whole boundary or of a part, under a claim of title to the whole, if no one else asserts title to any part on which claimant has so entered.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 100. Under the 5-year statute of limitations, a grantee who under a deed has color of title can only claim adverse possession to the interest conveyed.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

§ 100. The grantee under a deed to undivided interests held not to have acquired adverse possession beyond the limits of the deed under the 10-year statute of limitations.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

§ 103. One entering without a deed on a boundary plainly marked, with the intention of reducing the whole to his possession, held to reduce the whole to his actual possession.—New Domain Oil & Gas Co. v. Gaffney Oil Co. (Ky.) 699.

III. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW.

§ 114. Evidence held insufficient to show adverse possession against the commonwealth for the statutory period prior to the date of patent for land in controversy.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 116. In trespass to try title, when defendant claimed the whole tract by ten-year limitations, an instruction barring recovery thereunder, unless defendant's fencing and possession of a smaller tract in connection with his conduct would put a reasonably prudent person on notice that he claimed the whole tract, held proper, and not beyond the terms of Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, arts. 3343, 3344.—Hedrick v. Kilgore (Tex. Civ. App.) 892.

II. NATURE AND GROUNDS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

§ 19. Where, in a suit involving the right of the grantee of standing timber to remove logs cut, the grantee before final decree removed the logs, an appeal from the decree, so far as it relates to such logs, will not be considered.—Griffin v. Anderson Tully Co. (Ark.) 297.

§ 20. Though the circuit court has, under Ky. St. 1909 § 966 (Russell's St. § 2813), exclusive original jurisdiction of an action for injunction, held, it cannot entertain such a case on appeal from a court having no jurisdiction.—Brady v. Brannon (Ky.) 679.

§ 20. Where the county court was without jurisdiction of a cross action, the Court of Civil Appeals had no jurisdiction to revise the trial court's action with reference thereto.—Johnson v. W. H. Goolsby Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 883.

III. DECISIONS REVIEWABLE.

(D) Finality of Determination.

§ 71. The statute gives no appeal from an order refusing to dissolve an injunction once granted.—Jeff Chaison Town-Site Co. v. McFaddin, Wiess & Kyle Land Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 716.

§ 73. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 806 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 769), an appeal does not lie from an interlocutory judgment for dower.—Reineman v. Larkin (Mo.) 307.

§ 79. A judgment is final although some of the parties sued were not served and did not answer and therefore the judgment in the case makes no mention of them.—Porter v. Pecos & N. T. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 897.

IV. RIGHT OF REVIEW.

(A) Persons Entitled.

In proceedings to obtain prohibition orders, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 130.

(B) Estoppel, Waiver, or Agreements Affecting Right.

§ 165. Parties against whom an injunction has been granted by filing a motion to dissolve, which was overruled, did not lose their right to appeal from the order granting the injunction.—Jeff Chaison Town-Site Co. v. McFaddin, Wiess & Kyle Land Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 716.

V. PRESENTATION AND RESERVATION IN LOWER COURT OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW.

(B) Objections and Motions, and Rulings Thereon.

§ 193. An objection that the complaint did not state facts entitling plaintiff to relief cannot be made for the first time on appeal.—Sidle v. Michark Mfg. Co. (Ark.) 349.

§ 197. Evidence to establish an equitable estoppel or an estoppel in pais having been admitted without objection, plaintiff could not object on appeal that such defenses were not pleaded.—Cape Girardeau & T. B. T. R. Co. v. St. Louis & G. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 300.

§ 207. In an action for an employé's death while engaged in putting fuel oil into an engine tender, remarks made in argument by plaintiff's counsel that plaintiff had labored under great difficulties at trial, was compelled to pull the testimony from unwilling witnesses, etc., held not reversible.—Houston & Tex. C. R. Co. v. Alexander (Tex. Civ. App.) 602.

§ 231. An objection to an instruction held too general to merit consideration.—Stone v. Stitt (Tex. Civ. App.) 187.

(D) Motions for New Trial.

§ 292. Errors in instructions not made a ground for a new trial do not constitute a ground for reversal.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Wendt (Ky.) 661.

§ 305. No exception having been taken to the action of the trial court in overruling a motion for a new trial, the appellate court cannot review the merits.—Wohradsky v. Wohradsky (Mo. App.) 159.

VI. PARTIES.

§ 334. On the death of one of a number of appellants, a cause may proceed on appeal without a revival.—Reineman v. Larkin (Mo.) 307.

VII. REQUISITES AND PROCEEDINGS FOR TRANSFER OF CAUSE.

(C) Payment of Fees or Costs, and Bonds or Other Securities.

§ 389. The pauper affidavit on appeal, under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1401, held insufficient when subscribed and sworn to before a notary public.—Spell v. Wm. Cameron & Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 515.

VIII. EFFECT OF TRANSFER OF CAUSE OR PROCEEDINGS THEREFOR.

(A) Powers and Proceedings of Lower Court.

§ 437. A judgment adjudging title in plaintiff under the first count of the petition, stating a cause of action to quiet title under Rev. St. 1899, § 650 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 667), held admissible in evidence on the trial of the cause of action on the second count setting up a cause of action in ejectment, though appealed from with supersedeas.—Mann v. Doerr (Mo.) 86.

§ 447. A temporary injunction restraining defendant from doing a particular act held not suspended by an appeal under Gen. Laws 1907, p. 200, c. 107, with the supersedeas bond required by Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1404, 1406.—Ft. Worth Driving Club v. Ft. Worth Fair Ass'n (Tex. Civ. App.) 213.

X. RECORD AND PROCEEDINGS NOT IN RECORD.

(A) Matters to be Shown by Record.

§ 494. Where the record does not show any order made upon an application for a continuance, alleged error in overruling the application will not be considered.—Hedrick v. Kilgore (Tex. Civ. App.) 892.

§ 511. Recitals in the bill of exceptions that it was signed and filed and made of record are insufficient to permit the bill to be considered on appeal, as those facts must appear by the abstract.—Regent Laundry Co. v. Goodman (Mo. App.) 1082.

(B) Scope and Contents of Record.

§ 516. The record in a case at law consists of the record proper and the bill of exceptions.—Hanson v. Anderson (Ark.) 736.

§ 524. When a map or diagram is used, it should be incorporated in the record on appeal.—Phenix Jellico Coal Co. v. Lemp (Ky.) 418.

§ 525. Instructions cannot be considered by the appellate court where they are not made a part of the record by bill of exceptions or by order of court.—Runyons v. Burchett (Ky.) 975.

(C) Necessity of Bill of Exceptions, Case, or Statement of Facts.

§ 544. In an appeal from a judgment against an infant, the failure to secure the written acceptance of the person appointed as guardian ad litem is an error manifest on the face of the record and does not depend on the bill of exceptions.—Reineman v. Larkin (Mo.) 307.

(E) Abstracts of Record.

§ 582. The abstract may set out the evidence in a narrative form, except where the questions and answers are necessary to convey the meaning of the witness.—Doddridge v. Patterson (Mo.) 72.

§ 586. An abstract of record held fatally defective, where it nowhere appears at what term of court, if any, the motion for a new trial was filed or overruled, etc.—Flanagan Milling Co. v. City of St. Louis (Mo.) 112.

§ 586. In condensed form, an abstract should still preserve and evidence essential facts.—Flanagan Milling Co. v. City of St. Louis (Mo.) 112.

(F) Making, Form, and Requisites of Transcript or Return.

§ 601. The original statement of facts must be sent up on appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals, and the incorporation in the transcript of a copy thereof is not sufficient.—Vickrey v. Burks (Tex. Civ. App.) 177.

(H) Transmission, Filing, Printing, and Service of Copies.

§ 627. A meritorious appeal held not to be dismissed upon motion for failure to file the abstract at least 30 days before the cause was set for argument, as required by rule 15 (112 S. W. vi); the penalty being discretionary under rule 23.—Reynolds v. United Rys. Co. (Mo. App.) 1093.

§ 631. The Supreme Court will not go to a manuscript full transcript for certain matters, but they must be abstracted in "print."—Flanagan Milling Co. v. City of St. Louis (Mo.) 112.

(I) Defects, Objections, Amendment, and Correction.

§ 638. An appeal held to be disposed of as if no statement of facts was in the transcript, where a copy and not the original was incorporated therein.—Vickrey v. Burks (Tex. Civ. App.) 177.

§ 644. Where a motion to strike out a part of the record is sustained, the part complained of is not physically cast out of court, but is merely ignored, and the same result can be accomplished by timely objection to anything incorporated in a transcript which has no place there.—Vickrey v. Burks (Tex. Civ. App.) 177.

§ 649. Plaintiff's remedy to correct the record as to the date of the filing of the court's conclusions of law and fact is by a proceeding in the trial court.—Kimbell v. Powell (Tex. Civ. App.) 541.

§ 649. Where appellee claimed that conclusions of law and fact had not been filed in the time stated by the record, the appellate court could delay a case until the record had been corrected in the trial court.—Kimbell v. Powell (Tex. Civ. App.) 541.

§ 649. Appellee held barred by laches from obtaining a stay of decision on appeal, pending proceedings in the trial court to correct the record, so as to show that conclusions of law and fact were filed too late.—Kimbell v. Powell (Tex. Civ. App.) 541.

§ 653. The Supreme Court held to have no power to amend a bill of exceptions to bring into it the evidence and instructions, which were not furnished the clerk.—Hanson v. Anderson (Ark.) 736.

(J) Conclusiveness and Effect, Impeaching and Contradicting.

§ 662. The transcript on appeal cannot be contradicted or augmented by the agreement of the parties.—Rogers v. McMillion (Tex. Civ. App.) 176.

§ 669. The record showing the date of filing the trial court's conclusions of law and fact cannot be impeached on appeal by statement of the judge.—Kimbell v. Powell (Tex. Civ. App.) 541.

§ 670. The record showing the date of filing the trial court's conclusions of law and fact cannot be impeached on appeal by affidavit.—Kimbell v. Powell (Tex. Civ. App.) 541.

(K) Questions Presented for Review.

§ 671. Where the facts relied on by appellant are not set out in his abstract, the court will not explore the transcript to ascertain them.—Eagle v. Board of Com'rs of Fencing Dist. No. 2, Lonoke County (Ark.) 340.

§ 671. Only such assignments of error as appear on the record can be considered on appeal.—Hanson v. Anderson (Ark.) 736.

XI. ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

§ 719. Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1018, and Supreme Court Rule 29 (67 S. W. xv,) held that where the record fails to show any assignment of error filed, and no error is apparent of record, the judgment will be affirmed.—Durham v. Garrett (Tex. Civ. App.) 1141.

§ 724. Assignments of error which fail to point out wherein the error lies will be disregarded as contrary to rules 24–26 (67 S. W. xv).—Bynum v. Hobbs (Tex. Civ. App.) 900.

§ 728. Assignments complaining of rulings on evidence, failing to set out the objections and failing to contain any statement thereunder, were insufficient.—Stone v. Stitt (Tex. Civ. App.) 187.

§ 728. An assignment of error will not be considered by the appellate court where the evidence relating to the assignment is not pointed out.—Maricle v. McAlister Fuel Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 221.

§ 730. An assignment of error to the giving of a particular instruction held insufficient.—Stone v. Stitt (Tex. Civ. App.) 187.

§ 730. An assignment of error held too general.—Knowles v. Northern Texas Traction Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 232.

§ 742. Assignments complaining of rulings on evidence, failing to set out the objections and failing to contain any statement thereunder, were insufficent.—Stone v. Stitt (Tex. Civ. App.) 187.

§ 742. A statement following an assignment of error to the admission of evidence which was merely a conclusion as to the effect of the testimony is sufficient.—Stone v. Stitt (Tex. Civ. App.) 187.

§ 742. An assignment of error to the giving of a special charge held insufficient.—Stone v. Stitt (Tex. Civ. App.) 187.

§ 742. Where the admission of bills of lading in evidence is objected to, but the record contains only the substance of the bills of lading, and no statement in verification of the objection, the objection is insufficient.—Maricle v. McAlister Fuel Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 221.

§ 742. Where an assignment of error is not followed by a statement sufficient to explain it, as expressly required by Court of Civil Appeals Rule 31 (31 S. W. vii), it will not be considered.—Gilmer v. Veatch (Tex. Civ. App.) 545.

§ 742. Certain assignments of error to the exclusion of evidence held insufficient under Court of Appeals Rules 25 and 30 (67 S. W. xv, xvi).—Johnson v. W. H. Goolsby Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 883.

§ 742. A statement under a proposition, which statement did not refer to any particular portion of the statement of facts in its support, held insufficient.—Bynum v. Hobbs (Tex. Civ. App.) 900.

§ 743. Assignments complaining of rulings on evidence, failing to set out the objections and failing to contain any statement thereunder, were insufficient.—Stone v. Stitt (Tex. Civ. App.) 187.

§ 747. If an appellee is denied an instructed verdict to which he is entitled, he may have the ruling reviewed without a cross-assignment of error.—Gillean v. Witherspoon (Tex. Civ. App.) 909.

XII. BRIEFS.

§ 758. An assignment in the brief complaining of the introduction of a land office copy of the classification and appraisement of lands in controversy, because of a specific indorsement, cannot be considered where the bill of exceptions extends as well to the classification and appraisement, which were admissible in evidence.—Bynum v. Hobbs (Tex. Civ. App.) 900.

XIII. DISMISSAL, WITHDRAWAL, OR ABANDONMENT.

In replevin suit, see Replevin, § 116.

§ 776. Where appellee had not appeared before the appeal was dismissed upon appellant's motion, no rights of appellee were prejudiced by the dismissal.—Ft. Worth & R. G. Ry. Co. v. Kinder (Tex. Civ. App.) 569.

§ 801. A motion to dismiss an appeal on the ground that notice was not given will be denied, where the evidence as to the notice was conflicting.—Kimbell v. Powell (Tex. Civ. App.) 541.

§ 807. Where appellee had not appeared when appellant had the appeal dismissed, that appellee intended at some time to ask the statutory damages for delay was not ground for reinstatement of the case.—Ft. Worth & R. G. Ry. Co. v. Kinder (Tex. Civ. App.) 569.

XVI. REVIEW.

(A) Scope and Extent in General.

§ 856. The lower court will not be reversed in refusing a new trial because of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict where such ground is not incorporated in the motion for a new trial, although Kirby's Dig. § 6215, subd. 6, allows a new trial for insufficiency of evidence to sustain the verdict.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Sockwell (Ark.) 1046.

(C) Parties Entitled to Allege Error.

§ 878. Instructions unfavorable to plaintiffs cannot be reviewed on appeal by defendant.—Baker v. Modern Woodmen of America (Mo. App.) 794.

§ 880. A point made in the appellate court, by a party other than the sole party affected, will be overruled without deciding whether it would be good if raised by the right party.—Ball v. Peper Cotton Press Co. (Mo. App.) 798.

§ 881. In an action against a bank and a vendor to recover money deposited by a purchaser, held, that the vendor could not complain of the admission of evidence that he promised to furnish an abstract showing title, as varying the contract by parol, where he furnished a defective abstract, which he promised to, but never did, cure till after the date for paying the first installment, if at all.—Hunter v. Wallace (Tex. Civ. App.) 180.

§ 882. In an action to recover land, defendants held not entitled to complain that the court decided the issues presented in certain unnecessary pleadings.—Buchanan v. Boyd's Ex'r (Ky.) 981.

§ 882. A plaintiff procuring a judgment as prayed for in the first count of the petition, stating a cause of action under Rev. St. 1899, § 650 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 667), held not entitled on appeal to urge that the judgment was premature.—Mann v. Doerr (Mo.) 86.

§ 882. A reference in an instruction to irrelevant matter brought into the case by defendant, held not reversible error as to him.—Jenkins v. Clopton (Mo. App.) 759.

§ 882. Defendant cannot complain that an issue tendered by him was submitted to the jury, even if it was not within the allegations of the petition.—Jenkins v. Clopton (Mo. App.) 759.

(D) Amendments, Additional Proofs, and Trial of Cause Anew.

§ 889. Where evidence on an issue was received without objection, the court on appeal will consider the pleadings as amended to conform to the proof.—Griffin v. Anderson Tully Co. (Ark.) 297.

(E) Presumptions.

§ 907. The appellate court will presume that an action was dismissed as to parties whom the record does not show were served, or answered, although there is no judgment entry of the dismissal.—Porter v. Pecos & N. T. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 897.

§ 911. In view of the act of 1889 (Acts 1889, p. 152, c. 128), creating the Fourteenth and Forty-Fourth district courts of Dallas county, if necessary to sustain the validity of a judgment of the Forty-Fourth district court restraining issuance of execution on a judgment rendered in the other court, it could be presumed on writ of error that the injunction was issued in the Fourteenth district court and transferred to the Forty-Fourth district for trial.—Kruegel v. Rawlins (Tex. Civ. App.) 216.

§ 927. In determining the correctness of the direction of a verdict for defendant, the testimoney must be considered in the light most favorable to plaintiff.—Crawford v. Sawyer & Austin Lumber Co. (Ark.) 286.

§ 927. Where there was a peremptory instruction for defendant, plaintiff, for the purpose of testing the correctness of the instruction, is entitled to have the testimony for him taken as true, including such reasonable inferences as it warranted.—Gatz v. Harris (Ky.) 462.

§ 927. The court, in determining whether the motion for peremptory instructions should have been granted, must take as true the strongest legitimate view of the evidence in favor of the verdict, and disregard countervailing evidence.—Walton & Co. v. Burchel (Tenn.) 391.

§ 930. It should be assumed on appeal that the jury considered the charge as a whole.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Holt (Tex. Civ. App.) 581.

§ 932. Rulings on the petition as to the allegations demanding exemplary damages held harmless, where the verdict includes actual damages only.—Temple v. Duran (Tex. Civ. App.) 253.

§ 933. An extension of time for filing motion for new trial will, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary, be presumed to have been for the reason authorizing it under Civ. Code Prac. § 342.—Dickerson v. Eastern Kentucky Lumber Co. (Ky.) 662.

§ 933. An order for new trial on the ground of the verdict being against the weight of evidence is to be sustained, where there is substantial evidence to support a theory of the case contrary to the evidence.—Dickmann v. Hespos (Mo. App.) 325.

§ 933. Every presumption is to be indulged in favor of an order for new trial, without the ground therefor being assigned as directed by Rev. St. 1899, § 801 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 764).—Dickmann v. Hespos (Mo. App.) 325.

§ 937. Where the record shows a supersedeas bond, it will be presumed that a supersedeas issued.—Stewart v. Blue Grass Canning Co. (Ky.) 609.

§ 938. Testimony of witnesses, stricken out from the statement of facts by having pencil marks drawn across it, held to be treated on appeal as though the witnesses had never testified.—St. Louis, S. F. & T. Ry. Co. v. Wall (Tex. Civ. App.) 207.

§ 939. Where the record apparently contains a full abstract of the evidence, the court must presume that counsel for appellants obeyed the statutes, in the absence of a showing to the contrary.—Doddridge v. Patterson (Mo.) 72.

(F) Discretion of Lower Court.

§ 959. The setting aside of the submission and the allowing, before the taking of any proof, of an amended answer, which only states in a new form what has been stated in the original answer, held within the court's discretion, and not reviewable on appeal.—Lurker v. Ross (Ky.) 647.

§ 969. The ordering of a personal examination of plaintiff in a personal injury action is within the discretion of the trial court, and its exercise thereof will not be interfered with on appeal, unless manifestly abused.—Shamp v. Lambert (Mo. App.) 770.

§ 971. Under the evidence as to the qualification of witness, the admission of his estimate of the speed of the car in question held not such an abuse to the court's discretion as warranted interference by the Court of Appeals.—Slezak v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo. App.) 1095.

(G) Questions of Fact, Verdicts, and Findings.

§ 999. Questions of fact are peculiarly within the province of the jury and the appellate court cannot interfere.—Jenkins v. Clopton (Mo. App.) 759.

§ 1001. A verdict is conclusive upon the Supreme Court where there is any evidence to support it.—Hurley & Ross v. Oliver (Ark.) 920.

§ 1001. The verdict and the judgment are conclusive unless flagrantly against the weight of the evidence.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Wendt (Ky.) 661.

§ 1002. A verdict on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed unless flagrantly against the evidence.—Cincinnati Abattoir Co. v. Stoller (Ky.) 642.

§ 1003. A finding not flagrantly against the evidence cannot be disturbed on appeal.—North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Robertson (Ky.) 630.

§ 1004. It is only where the damages are so large as to appear to be the result of passion or prejudice that the Court of Appeals will interfere.—Cincinnati, N. & C. Ry. Co. v. Cooke (Ky.) 956.

§ 1008. A finding of the trial court sitting as a jury is as conclusive on appeal as the finding of a jury.—France v. Shockey (Ark.) 1056.

§ 1009. A chancellor's finding of fact will be sustained, unless against the preponderance of the evidence.—Sidle v. Michark Mfg. Co. (Ark.) 349.

§ 1009. The chancellor's findings of fact will be sustained if not against the preponderance of the evidence.—Claypool v. Johnston (Ark.) 941.

§ 1009. The Court of Appeals in a proceeding to set aside a deed will rely with confidence on the judgment of the chancellor in passing on the facts.—Diuguid v. Roberts (Ky.) 464.

§ 1009. The chancellor's finding will be upheld, though a different conclusion might have been reached, where the evidence is nearly balanced.—Rice v. Music (Ky.) 610.

§ 1009. In an equity case the Supreme Court will proceed de novo and make its own findings and enter judgment, if those of the trial court are not sustained by the evidence and law.—Givens v. Ott (Mo.) 23.

§ 1009. In an equity case, the Supreme Court should defer largely to the finding of the trial court as to issues of fact.—McCoy v. Randall (Mo.) 31.

§ 1011. A finding supported by the positive testimony of a party, and merely contradicted by the uncertain testimony of the adverse party having the burden of proof, is binding on the court on appeal.—Barrett v. Kern (Mo. App.) 774.

§ 1011. An assignment that the court erred in overruling a plea to the jurisdiction held not sustainable in view of the findings of the court on conflicting evidence.—Stadtler v. South Texas Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 1132.

§ 1017. The findings of the master held as conclusive as the verdict of a jury.—Griffin v. Anderson Tully Co. (Ark.) 297.

(H) Harmless Error.

§ 1027. Under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 659, 865 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 679, 812), an error to be reversible must originally affect the merits, and it must not have been waived or cured.—Mann v. Doerr (Mo.) 86.

§ 1032. Where the bill of exceptions stated no facts showing a party injured by the admission of improper testimony, the court must presume that he suffered none.—Temple v. Duran (Tex. Civ. App.) 253.

§ 1033. Compelling the jury to find irrelevant facts before finding for plaintiff, held not prejudicial to defendant.—Jenkins v. Clopton (Mo. App.) 759.

§ 1036. Misjoinder of parties in an action to quiet title and in ejectment held not ground for reversal.—Mann v. Doerr (Mo.) 86.

§ 1040. Rulings on the petition as to the allegations demanding exemplary damages held harmless, where the verdict includes actual damages only.—Temple v. Duran (Tex. Civ. App.) 253.

§ 1040. The error in overruling exceptions to the petition insufficiently alleging grounds for exemplary damages is harmless, where the court confines the issue of exemplary damages.—Temple v. Duran (Tex. Civ. App.) 253.

§ 1041. Defendants held not prejudiced by the court's allowing an amended petition where the original one was sufficient to sustain a decree.—Diuguid v. Roberts (Ky.) 464.

§ 1041. Though an amended reply was filed to prevent the case going to the jury, the case will not be reversed and remanded for a jury trial on an issue playing no part in the action.—Buchanan v. Boyd's Ex'r (Ky.) 981.

§ 1041. Whether the court was right in requiring plaintiff to allege that it did not know which state of facts on which he relied in his petition was true held immaterial in a case wherein he conformed to the court's rulings, and the whole matter was placed in issue and trial had on the merits of the whole case.—Ratliff v. Daniel's Ex'r (Ky.) 1034.

§ 1042. No possible prejudice could have resulted from striking a paragraph of the answer, where the court admitted all evidence offered by defendants on the issue thereby raised.—Hurley & Ross v. Oliver (Ark.) 920.

§ 1042. Where, notwithstanding the court struck a paragraph of the answer, it admitted evidence on the issue thereby raised, if defendants wished to introduce additional evidence they should have stated that they were surprised at the change of ruling, and should have asked for a continuance, and, not having done so, they cannot thereafter complain.—Hurley & Ross v. Oliver (Ark.) 920.

§ 1047. Erroneous rulings on evidence held harmless.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Duncan (Tex. Civ. App.) 362.

§ 1047. Where no injury is shown, any error in refusing counsel a longer time to examine witnesses is harmless.—Stephenville North & South Texas Ry. Co. v. Moore (Tex. Civ. App.) 882.

§ 1050. Admission of improper evidence, consisting of physician's opinions, based on objective symptoms, held not harmless to defendant.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Wiley (Ky.) 402.

§ 1050. In an action for the death of one engaged in putting fuel oil in an engine tender by slipping on a greasy fuel box lid in descending from the tender, admission of testimony that decedent was slow, and the engineer often hurried him in filling the tender, held not reversible error.—Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Alexander (Tex. Civ. App.) 602.

§ 1050. In an action for the death of an employé while engaged in filling a tender with fuel oil, by slipping on a fuel box lid, where the engineer and fireman were the only persons present at the time of the accident, admission of testimony by the engineer, in answer to questions as to whether the fireman was at trial, etc., and was still in the company's employment, held not reversible error.—Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Alexander (Tex. Civ. App.) 602.

§ 1050. In a suit for specific performance, evidence of the possession of plaintiff's assignor when the contract was made was harmless.—Durham v. Breathwit (Tex. Civ. App.) 890.

§ 1051. Admission of incompetent evidence of a fact otherwise shown by undisputed evidence is not prejudicial.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Sanders (Ark.) 337.

§ 1051. Erroneous admission of evidence of changes in a city sidewalk since plaintiff's injury held not prejudicial.—City of Madisonville v. Stewart (Ky.) 421.

§ 1051. Where an action has been tried twice, and defendant's evidence makes out a prima facie case for him, a judgment for defendant will not be reversed for the admission of incompetent evidence not affecting the parties' rights.—Farmers' Bank of Wickliffe v. Wickliffe (Ky.) 498.

§ 1051. On the issue as to whether a sale of public lands had been forfeited by the state, error in the admission of certain evidence held harmless.—Slaughter v. Cooper (Tex. Civ. App.) 173.

§ 1051. Error, in the admission of a decedent's self-serving declarations as to his ancestor's family history to sustain a claim of title, held harmless, where the fact was shown by other competent evidence.—Kirby v. Boaz (Tex. Civ. App.) 223.

§ 1051. The error in admitting evidence of a fact previously established by evidence, admitted without objection, is harmless.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Mitcham (Tex. Civ. App.) 871.

§ 1053. The error in admitting evidence in support of an issue is harmless, where no such issue is submitted to the jury.—Knowles v. Northern Texas Traction Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 232.

§ 1054. A judgment of the court in a case tried without a jury will not be reversed because of erroneous admission of evidence which could not have affected the decision.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

§ 1056. Where the jury awarded actual damages only, the error in excluding evidence relieving defendant from liability for exemplary damages was harmless.—Temple v. Duran (Tex. Civ. App.) 253.

§ 1057. Where the injuries set out in the amended petition, on which a personal injury action was tried, were in substance the same as those in the original petition, the exclusion of that part of the original petition, which set up the injuries, is not prejudicial.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Mitcham (Tex. Civ. App.) 871.

§ 1060. Argument of counsel, relating to the testimony of defendant's witnesses as to the extent of plaintiff's injuries, held not prejudicial.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Adams (Tex. Civ. App.) 876.

§ 1066. Where insured was entitled to recover on both parts of a policy, insurer was not prejudiced by the court's charge that the policy was divisible.—Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. Kaufman (Ark.) 289.

§ 1066. In an action on an insurance policy, an instruction if inaccurate, held not prejudicial to defendant.—Roseberry v. American Benevolent Ass'n (Mo. App.) 785.

§ 1066. Where a count based upon an ordinance had been abandoned, the giving of an instruction based upon the ordinance held prejudicial error.—Reynolds v. United Rys. Co. (Mo. App.) 1093.

§ 1067. In an action against a carrier, failure to give a charge held not prejudicial.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Moore (Ky.) 666.

§ 1067. In an action for money received, where defendant claimed that the money sued for was retained as reasonable compensation for services, and plaintiff claimed there was an agreement for 10 per cent. compensation, an instruction that any contract for 10 per cent. compensation must have been made between the parties before the suit, held not so relevant so as to make its refusal reversible error.—Jenkins v. Clopton (Mo. App.) 759.

§ 1068. Where the judgment was correct under the undisputed evidence, no errors in instructions could have been prejudicial.—Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Carl (Ark.) 932.

§ 1068. In an action for the death of a child struck by a street car, the error in an instruction held not prejudicial to plaintiff.—Netter's Adm'r v. Louisville Ry. Co. (Ky.) 636.

§ 1068. Error in refusing special charges held harmless.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Duncan (Tex. Civ. App.) 362.

§ 1070. In an action on a note, the error in a verdict held not prejudicial to defendant.—Samples v. Wever (Tex. Civ. App.) 1129.

§ 1073. A judgment for costs against a receiver was not prejudicial to him where it provided for payment only out of the property of the corporation.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Ormond (Tex. Civ. App.) 899.

(I) Error Waived in Appellate Court.

§ 1075. An error in the award of judgment and execution for plaintiff held not reversible, where counsel for defendants waived the error.—Reineman v. Larkin (Mo.) 307.

§ 1078. An assignment of error in a motion for new trial, but not presented in appellant's brief, will be considered as waived or abandoned.—Hurley & Ross v. Oliver (Ark.) 920.

XVII. DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION OF CAUSE.

(B) Affirmance.

§ 1127. A properly certified copy of the judgment must accompany a motion to affirm on certificate.—Thorn v. Lanier (Tex. Civ. App.) 715.

§ 1127. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1016, held, that a certificate for affirmance must be filed by appellee, or defendant in error, at the term of the appellate court to which the appeal or writ of error is returnable.—Thorn v. Lanier (Tex. Civ. App.) 715.

(C) Modification.

§ 1151. A judgment allowing interest from an earlier date than claimed in the petition is erroneous, and will be reformed.—Davidson v. Wills (Tex. Civ. App.) 540.

(D) Reversal.

§ 1163. Where the record shows the county court got no jurisdiction on appeal from a justice's court, because the latter entered no final judgment, held, the judgment of the former will be reversed, and cause remanded, with directions.—Brown v. McClendon (Tex. Civ. App.) 903.

§ 1170. In an action for personal injuries, the refusal of the court to order a physical examination of plaintiff held harmless, within Rev. St. 1899, § 865 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 812).—Shamp v. Lambert (Mo. App.) 770.

§ 1173. Reversal of a judgment as against one of two defendants held not to necessitate reversal as to the other.—Westervelt v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo.) 114.

§ 1173. Where, on appeal by two defendants, it appears from the record that no case was made against either, the judgment will be reversed as to both defendants, and the appeal will not be dismissed as to the one not prosecuting it.—McKee v. Rudd (Mo.) 312.

§ 1175. The court, on appeal in an action for penalties, held authorized, in view of plaintiff's concessions, to render judgment in his favor for the minimum penalty for each offense.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 256.

§ 1175. Where, under the undisputed evidence, the trial court should have directed a verdict for defendants the court of civil appeals will, upon reversal of judgment for plaintiffs, render judgment for defendants as the trial court should have done.—Lewis v. Mansfield Grain & Elevator Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 585.

§ 1178. Where an appeal from a decree vacating a sale of collaterals was reversed and plaintiff's petition held insufficient, she would be permitted to amend on remand.—Bank of Cerulean Springs v. Gardner (Ky.) 608.

§ 1178. The general rule is that appellate courts may properly, when a judgment is reversed, remand to allow appellee to amend his pleadings, when it seems to be required in the interest of justice.—Tillman v. Erp (Tex. Civ. App.) 547.

§ 1178. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1027, held that a case upon reversal could not be remanded to allow appellee to plead the statute of limitations against appellant's claim.—Tillman v. Erp (Tex. Civ. App.) 547.

(E) Rendition, Form, and Entry of Judgment.

§ 1185. Where, on affirmance, appellee was entitled to 10 per cent. damages, the failure of the clerk to so enter the judgment was a clerical mistake which might be corrected after the term.—Stewart v. Blue Grass Canning Co. (Ky.) 609.

(F) Mandate and Proceedings in Lower Court.

Presumptions as to performance of official duty by clerk of court on remand of case, see Evidence, § 83.

§ 1190. Disposition of cause transferred from the circuit to the chancery court stated upon reversal for proceedings consistent with opinion.—McDonald v. Shaw (Ark.) 935.

§ 1195. A decision of the Court of Appeals that defendant railroad company was liable for its vendor's breach of covenant held the law of the case on a new trial.—Louisville, H. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Baskett (Ky.) 957.

§ 1195. Reversal on the ground that the court erred in refusing a new trial for newly discovered evidence is a holding that the evidence, if produced, would require the trial court to arrive at a different conclusion.—Million v. Million's Ex'rs (Ky.) 985.

§ 1195. The decision on a prior appeal that evidence was admissible as to the contents of a receipt constituted the law of the case on retrial.—Million v. Million's Ex'rs (Ky.) 985.

§ 1195. A decision on appeal that the circuit court in partition in equity has jurisdiction to reimburse one holding an interest fee and a remainder in trust for expenses incurred

III. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF ATTORNEY TO CLIENT.

§ 126. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 444, a judgment may be obtained on motion by a client against his attorney for money collected or property received.—Board of Education of Mercer County v. Allin (Ky.) 676; Same v. Commonwealth, Id.

§ 126. Under Acts 1908, p. 133, c. 56 (Ky. St. 1909, § 4426), the county board of education held the proper party to ask a rule requiring the county attorney to pay over money collected under a judgment in an action by the commonwealth for the benefit of the common schools of the county.—Board of Education of Mercer County v. Allin (Ky.) 676; Same v. Commonwealth, Id.

§ 128. In an action for money had and received, consisting of funds of an estate collected by defendant for the heirs, 50 per cent. of which he claimed as compensation, defendant may show that under his agreement with the heirs he should receive that amount as compensation.—Jenkins v. Clopton (Mo. App.) 759.

§ 128. In an action for money received, consisting of funds of an estate collected by defendant, of which he retained 50 per cent. as a reasonable compensation, the fact that defendant in collecting the funds discovered that plaintiffs were entitled as heirs to another estate, and sued to recover it, held wholly irrelevant.—Jenkins v. Clopton (Mo. App.) 759.

§ 128. In an action for money received, where defendant claimed that the money was retained as the reasonable value of services performed, for which there was no agreed compensation, an instruction held to sufficiently present defendant's theory.—Jenkins v. Clopton (Mo. App.) 759.

§ 128. In an action for money received, in which defendant claimed the money retained as reasonable compensation for services, and plaintiff claimed that there was a special contract for compensation for a less sum, an instruction held not objectionable as being outside the issues because it authorized a verdict for plaintiff though defendant did not contract specially for compensation.—Jenkins v. Clopton (Mo. App.) 759.

IV. COMPENSATION AND LIEN OF ATTORNEY.

(A) Fees and Other Remuneration.

Usurious transactions for payment of fees, see Usury, § 31.

(B) Lien.

§ 189. The attorney for complainant in a suit to cancel a contract giving defendant an option to purchase real estate held not to acquire a lien on the real estate for his fee.—Landreth v. Powell (Tenn.) 500.

BANKRUPTCY.

I. CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

§ 9. Act of 1856 (Ky. St. §§ 1910–1917 [Russell's St. §§ 2104–2111]) held not a bankrupt or insolvency statute.—Louisville Dry Goods Co. v. Lanman (Ky.) 1042.

§ 9. Under Ky. St. §§ 1910–1917 (Russell's St. §§ 2104–2111) and Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 54, §§ 3a(2), 60b, 30 Stat. 546, 562 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 3422, 3445), right of state court to take jurisdiction of preferential mortgages by an insolvent debtor stated.—Louisville Dry Goods Co. v. Lanman (Ky.) 1042.

Digitized by Google

II. PETITION, ADJUDICATION, WARRANT, AND CUSTODY OF PROPERTY.

(A) Jurisdiction and Course of Procedure in General.

§ 20. The state court, having taken jurisdiction of an attack on a preferential mortgage, could adjudge a recovery against the debtor in personam in favor of the creditor against whom the preference was made, though the federal court had taken jurisdiction of the debtor's affairs, staying the execution until his application for discharge in bankruptcy has been acted upon by the federal court.—Louisville Dry Goods Co. v. Lanman (Ky.) 1042.

§ 20. Right of seller to sue buyer in the state court where the federal court, in bankruptcy proceedings, is unable to discharge the debtor from the debt.—Louisville Dry Goods Co. v. Lanman (Ky.) 1042.

III. ASSIGNMENT, ADMINISTRATION, AND DISTRIBUTION OF BANKRUPT'S ESTATE.

(B) Assignment, and Title, Rights, and Remedies of Trustee in General.

§ 149. Under Bankrupt Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63, 30 Stat. 562 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447), debts of solvent partners against bankrupt partners held an "unliquidated claim" against the bankrupts, within section 63, subd. "b," which was a provable debt when the petition was filed, and hence was barred by failure to present it.—Dycus v. Brown (Ky.) 1010.

(F) Claims Against and Distribution of Estate.

§ 314. The proper construction of the provision of Bankrupt Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3418), relating to provable debts, stated.—Dycus v. Brown (Ky.) 1010.

§ 320. Under Bankrupt Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63, 30 Stat. 562 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447), debts of solvent partners against bankrupt partners held an "unliquidated claim" against the bankrupts, within section 63, subd. "b," which was a provable debt when the petition was filed, and hence was barred by failure to present it.—Dycus v. Brown (Ky.) 1010.

V. RIGHTS, REMEDIES, AND DISCHARGE OF BANKRUPT.

§ 421. Creditors who had actual notice of the adjudication of their debtor in bankruptcy, and of the steps taken in the proceedings, were bound to present their claim, though they were not mentioned as creditors, and their claim was barred by the discharge, though never presented.—Dycus v. Brown (Ky.) 1010.

§ 421. Under Bankrupt Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63, 30 Stat. 562 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3447), debts of insolvent partners against bankrupt partners held an "unliquidated claim" against the bankrupts, within section 63, subd. "b," which was a provable debt when the petition was filed, and hence was barred by failure to present it.—Dycus v. Brown (Ky.) 1010.

§ 426. A certain debt held not released under a discharge in bankruptcy under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, subd. 4, 30 Stat. 550 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3428).—Louisville Dry Goods Co. v. Lanman (Ky.) 1042.

§ 436. In an action against bankrupts after their discharge, by persons engaged in a joint transaction with them for the purchase and sale of tobacco, to recover loss in the partnership transaction, in which defendants set up their charge in bankruptcy, evidence held to show that plaintiffs knew, when defendants filed their petition in bankruptcy, that the transaction would result in loss leaving defendants indebted to them.—Dycus v. Brown (Ky.) 1010.

I. DESCRIPTION.

§ 3. A call in a description of a survey for a well-known line of a prior survey held to control a call for course and distance, and to include all land up to the marked line.—Bell v. Powers (Ky.) 991.

§ 3. A plat of a survey is inadmissible to control a description calling for the line of an old and established patent running from one known point to another.—Bell v. Powers (Ky.) 991.

§ 3. That a call in a survey was for the "line" of another survey between certain points which in fact consisted of four lines and three corners held immaterial.—Bell v. Powers (Ky.) 991.

§ 3. Where there are two descriptions, one consistent with the evident intention of the parties and the other rendering the deed inoperative, the false call will be rejected.—Hubbard v. Whitehead (Mo.) 69.

§ 3. Succeeding calls held under certain circumstances to control starting point, where in conflict.—Hubbard v. Whitehead (Mo.) 69.

§ 3. The calls in a patent constitute a written description, and when not ambiguous or conflicting, the boundaries of the land granted are to be determined from some of the calls of the grant, and extraneous facts can only be used to remove or determine conflicting calls.—Guill v. O'Bryan (Tex. Civ. App.) 593.

§ 3. In determining the true dividing line between surveys, if from a definite beginning point course and distance alone will with reasonable certainty locate and identify the line, course and distance will control.—Guill v. O'Bryan (Tex. Civ. App.) 593.

§ 3. Where no marked trees are on a patented survey identified as those of the grant, the true boundary must be ascertained by course and distance given in the patent.—Guill v. O'Bryan (Tex. Civ. App.) 593.

II. EVIDENCE, ASCERTAINMENT, AND ESTABLISHMENT.

§ 35. Admissibility of certain evidence in an action to determine a boundary discussed.—Guill v. O'Bryan (Tex. Civ. App.) 593.

§ 37. In an action to determine the boundary between two surveys, evidence held to show that the true line runs so as to include the disputed land in defendants' survey.—Guill v. O'Bryan (Tex. Civ. App.) 593.

BROKERS.

See Principal and Agent.

IV. COMPENSATION AND LIEN.

Parol or extrinsic evidence of contract for compensation, see Evidence, § 463.

§ 58. Where defendant real estate brokers in fact procured a purchaser for plaintiffs' property who executed a contract valid on its face with plaintiffs for the exchange of property, defendants were entitled to their commission whether or not plaintiffs misrepresented their property to the purchaser so as to justify him in refusing to exchange.—Lewis v. Mansfield Grain & Elevator Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 585.

§ 63. Where a contract for the exchange of property provided that if the purchaser whom the broker procured, failed to perform, his title to a certain tract should pass to the other party in accordance with a deed deposited with the broker, failure to have such deed recorded upon the purchaser's failure to perform held to be the fault of the owner so that it would not prevent the broker from recovering commissions.—Lewis v. Mansfield Grain & Elevator Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 585.

§ 74. A mere selling agent or broker has no such interest in a contract to purchase land as authorizes recovery for lost commissions from the purchaser who refuses to perform.—Le Master v. Dalhart Real Estate Agency (Tex. Civ. App.) 185.

§ 74. A contract between the owner and a purchaser procured by defendant brokers held not to make defendants' commissions depend upon the consummation of the exchange of property between them but upon the approval of the title of each party, nor were defendants bound to look to the purchaser for their commissions if he failed to perform, plaintiffs being bound to pay the commissions in such case.—Lewis v. Mansfield Grain & Elevator Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 585.

V. ACTIONS FOR COMPENSATION.

§ 86. Evidence held to sustain an implied finding that a broker was the procuring cause of a sale.—Callen v. Bevil (Tex. Civ. App.) 369.

VI. RIGHTS, POWERS, AND LIABILITIES AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

§ 100. A purchaser of land held not entitled to specific performance of the contract of purchase.—Shirley v. Coffin (Tex. Civ. App.) 181.

I. CONTROL AND REGULATION OF COMMON CARRIERS.

(A) In General.

Excessive fines for violation of regulation, see Criminal Law, § 1214.
Law providing cumulative penalties for charging excessive rates as depriving of property without due process of law, see Constitutional Law, § 298.
Validity of law making rates fixed by railroad commission conclusive except in direct action to test validity as denying equal protection of law, see Constitutional Law, § 242.

§ 4. A belt line railway company held not a common carrier within the meaning of Acts 1905, p. 29, c. 25, § 1, relating to the venue of actions against common carriers.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Henson (Tex. Civ. App.) 1127.

§ 12. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 4565, 4566, certain freight rates held unreasonable and unjust.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 256.

§ 13. A contract rate in a transportation contract which was a mistake held not a discrimination.—Texas Mexican Ry. Co. v. Reed (Tex. Civ. App.) 519.

§ 13. The charging of a lower freight rate not open to all shippers is a discrimination.—Texas Mexican Ry. Co. v. Reed (Tex. Civ. App.) 519.

§ 20. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 4573, 4575, a carrier held guilty of separate offenses, and liable to a penalty for each offense.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 256.

§ 20. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4575, a railroad making an overcharge under a mistake of law held liable to the penalties imposed.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 256.

§ 20. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 4573, 4581, a shipper held entitled to recover penalties for each separate act of extortion committed by the carrier demanding excessive freight charges.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 256.

§ 20. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 4568, 4575, a shipper held authorized to sue for excessive freight charges collected by the carrier, and for the penalties imposed without applying to the Railroad Commission for relief.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 256.

II. CARRIAGE OF GOODS.

(A) Delivery to Carrier.

§ 41. Facts held to show a delivery of cotton to a railroad company for transportation before it was destroyed by fire.—Texas Midland R. R. v. H. L. Edwards & Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 570.

(F) Loss of or Injury to Goods.

(H) Limitation of Liability.

§ 150. Public policy forbids a common carrier from exempting itself by contract from damages for loss by its own negligence.—Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Carl (Ark.) 932.

§ 153. Where cotton had been delivered to a railroad company and accepted for shipment, the fact that the bills of lading, which had not been signed before the cotton was destroyed by fire, negatived the company's liability for destruction by fire held not to prevent a recovery of the value of the cotton.—Texas Midland R. R. v. H. L. Edwards & Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 570.

(I) Connecting Carriers.

§ 180. Under the Hepburn amendment (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 7, 34 Stat. 593 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1907, p. 906]) to the interstate commerce act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 20, 24 Stat. 386 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3169]), an initial carrier could not by contract limit the liability of a connecting carrier for loss of freight on its line.—Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Carl (Ark.) 932.

§ 185. Where the initial carrier received goods for transportation to another state by a connecting carrier, in absence of contrary evidence, it is presumed that the goods were lost through the negligence of the last carrier.—Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Carl (Ark.) 932.

(J) Charges and Liens.

§ 192. Where both carrier and cattle shipper intended the cattle should be transported at the regular rate, which by mistake was not named in the contract, it was not material that the shipper had no knowledge of a contract provision for the correction of the rate, if erroneous. —Texas Mexican Ry. Co. v. Reed (Tex. Civ. App.) 519.

§ 193. A cattle shipper, being liable for additional freight charge from a mistake in the rate, and having refused to pay the same, could not recover for injury to the cattle while detained by the last carrier, in the absence of negligence in caring for the cattle while so detained.—Texas Mexican Ry. Co. v. Reed (Tex. Civ. App.) 519.

§ 193. A connecting carrier by receiving cattle from the initial carrier for a further transportation to destination is not bound by a freight rate specified by the initial carrier's agent through mistake.—Texas Mexican Ry. Co. v. Reed (Tex. Civ. App.) 519.

III. CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK.

Application of instructions to pleadings and issues in action for injuries, see Trial, § 251.
Opinion evidence as to value, see Evidence, § 497.

§ 210. If a carrier's agent ordered plaintiff to unload a horse at a place where there were no proper facilities, it was immaterial, upon plaintiff's right to recover for resulting injuries, whether contract of carriage was to unload the horse at that point or another.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gormley (Ky.) 965.

§ 215. The crowded condition of the stockyards at its terminus held not to excuse a railroad company from liability for negligence in handling a shipment of cattle.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Henson (Tex. Civ. App.) 1127.

§ 219. An initial carrier's negligence in naming an incorrect freight rate to a cattle shipper held not the proximate cause of injury to the cattle resulting from their detention by the ultimate carrier because of the shipper's refusal to pay the difference between the specified and correct rate.—Texas Mexican Ry. Co. v. Reed (Tex. Civ. App.) 519.

§ 219. A cattle shipper, being liable for additional freight charge from a mistake in the rate, and having refused to pay the same, could not recover for injury to the cattle while detained by the last carrier, in the absence of negligence in caring for the cattle while so detained.—Texas Mexican Ry. Co. v. Reed (Tex. Civ. App.) 519.

§ 228. In an action against a railroad company for damages for injuries to a horse in unloading it, evidence held to sustain a verdict for $2,000.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gormley (Ky.) 965.

§ 228. In an action against a carrier for injuries to cattle, an instruction that the burden of proof of the carrier's negligence on the whole case was on plaintiffs held proper.—Baker v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 907.

§ 230. Where there was evidence that cattle shipped died from their inherent condition, there was no error in submitting that phase of the carrier's defense to the jury.—Baker v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 907.

§ 230. An instruction requiring that a carrier must have used ordinary care in shipping plaintiff's cattle before it would be relieved from liability for ordinary shrinkage held not prejudicial to plaintiff.—Baker v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 907.

IV. CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS.

(A) Relation Between Carrier and Passenger.

§ 247. One who re-entered a railroad company's depot to purchase a ticket to be used on another line held not a passenger of the company.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Duncan (Tex. Civ. App.) 362.

(C) Performance of Contract of Transportation.

§ 277. Punitive damages held recoverable, where a conductor abused a passenger who boarded the train not knowing that it did not stop at the station to which he had a ticket.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Strosnider (Ky.) 971.

§ 277. A verdict of $750 held not excessive, where a conductor abused and threatened a passenger who had boarded the train not knowing that it did not stop at his station.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Strosnider (Ky.) 971.

§ 278. Whether signals by plaintiff at a railroad flag station were sufficient to attract the attention of the engineer held for the jury.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Moore (Ky.) 666.

(D) Personal Injuries.

Assumption by judge as to facts in instructions, see Trial, § 191.
Receiver of railroad company as party defendant, see Receivers, § 179.

§ 280. Instructions only requiring of a carrier's servants the exercise of ordinary care to protect passengers from injury held to call for a degree of care below the legal requirements.—Groshong v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis (Mo. App.) 1084.

§ 48. Act May 16, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 500, c. 22), relating to foreign corporations, construed.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. State (Tex. Civ. App.) 194.

III. DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENTAL POWERS AND FUNCTIONS.

(B) Judicial Powers and Functions.

§ 70. The legislative exercise of the police power must be reasonable, and whether or not it is reasonable is for the courts to determine, but the necessity for the exercise of the power in a given case is addressed to the discretion of the Legislature.—Missouri & N. A. R. Co. v. State (Ark.) 930.

§ 70. The Constitution permits special legislation when general laws cannot be made applicable, and the Legislature is the sole judge of the necessity for a special statute.—Missouri & N. A. R. Co. v. State (Ark.) 930.

VI. VESTED RIGHTS.

§ 105. One contracting with the state must do so with knowledge that he must rely solely on the legislative branch for performance of the contract and for satisfaction of the state's just obligations, though the privilege of suing the state is extended to him, as the right to sue the state is not a vested right, and may be withdrawn at any time.—Pitcock v. State (Ark.) 742.

VII. OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

(B) Contracts of States and Municipalities.

§ 120. Statutes regulating the control and management of corporations within the state are not contracts, but only police regulations, which may be amended or repealed at pleasure.—State ex rel. arbitrary classification, to place burdens upon one class of persons not shared by others.—Missouri & N. A. R. Co. v. State (Ark.) 930.

§ 241. A statute requiring a certain railroad to fence its track in certain counties held not violative of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, because there are other railroads in that portion of the state and another railroad traverses one of the counties; the statute not being an arbitrary classification.—Missouri & N. A. R. Co. v. State (Ark.) 930.

§ 242. Rev. St. 1895, art. 4564, when considered in connection with articles 4565, 4566, held not to deny to the railroads the equal protection of the law in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 256.

XI. DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

§ 257. Conviction of accused for murder before a judge pro tem appointed by the Governor without authority held a deprivation of life without due process of law, in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14.—Oates v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 370.

§ 295. Act May 14, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 447, c. 8), making a local option election binding unless contested within the time prescribed, and making the result of a contest binding though a person may not have been a party thereto, held not a denial of due process of law in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14.—Stockard v. Reid (Tex. Civ. App.) 1144.

§ 298. Rev. St. 1895, art. 4581, held not invalid as depriving one of his property without due process of law in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 256.

§ 305. A judgment rendered by a state judge does not deprive the defeated party of his property without due process of law, in violation of 14th amendment to the federal Constitution, merely because the judge was the father-in-law of the attorney of the successful party, who was entitled to receive a part of the judgment for his fees.—Missouri, K. & T. I. NATURE, EXTENT, AND EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION IN GENERAL.

§ 33. The jurisdiction of courts of inferior jurisdiction and of courts not proceeding according to the course of the common law must affirmatively appear on the face of the proceedings.—Doddridge v. Patterson (Mo.) 72.

II. ESTABLISHMENT, ORGANIZATION, AND PROCEDURE IN GENERAL.

(B) Terms, Vacations, Place and Time of Holding Court, Courthouses, and Accommodations.

§ 74. If a witness is unable to appear because of illness, the court in its discretion may upon a motion of the party desiring the evidence permit the jury together with counsel and the parties to go to the witness, and there take his testimony.—Davis v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 429.

(C) Rules of Court and Conduct of Business.

§ 80. A court rule, providing that, after a case is set for trial, it shall not be reset or continued without consent of court, and on sufficient reasons, was reasonable.—Conrad Schopp Fruit Co. v. Bondurant (Ky.) 482.

(D) Rules of Decision, Adjudications, Opinions, and Records.

§ 89. Where no rule of property is disturbed, and the dignity and sovereignty of the state is involved, the court must overrule erroneous decisions.—Pitcock v. State (Ark.) 742.

§ 89. One suing the State Penitentiary Board to restrain its breach of a contract for convict labor cannot complain because the court determines that the suit is one against the state, within the prohibition in Const. art. 5, § 19, thereby overruling a prior decision authorizing the maintenance of a suit on the same contract against the same board.—Pitcock v. State (Ark.) 742.

§ 91. A ruling of law by the Supreme Court is binding upon the Court of Civil Appeals.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Holt (Tex. Civ. App.) 581.

§ 93. Decisions which become rules of property should not be overruled, whether right or wrong.—Pitcock v. State (Ark.) 742.

§ 97. The decisions of the federal Supreme Court as to what constitutes intrastate commerce and interstate and foreign commerce are conclusive on the state courts.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 256.

III. COURTS OF GENERAL ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

(A) Grounds of Jurisdiction in General.

§ 120. The county court held to have no jurisdiction to enjoin a judgment of a justice for less than $100.—Arnold v. McNinch & Raney (Tex. Civ. App.) 904.

§ 121. Where the amount gives the circuit court jurisdiction, plaintiff can have the case submitted to the jury, regardless of the amount which the proof shows he is entitled to recover, where there is some evidence to establish his claim.—Montgomery v. Glasscock (Ky.) 668.

§ 121. The county court was without jurisdiction of a cross-action for $750 in a suit by plaintiff to recover $550.—Johnson v. W. H. Goolsby Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 883.

(B) Courts of Particular States.

§ 135. Under Ky. St. 1909, § 966 (Russell's St. § 2813), that an attachment was obtained and levied on defendant's land held to give the circuit court jurisdiction, though the note sued on was for less than $50 and though otherwise, under Ky. St. 1909, § 1086 (Russell's St. § 3100), the justice's or quarterly court would have had exclusive jurisdiction.—Hatton v. Rogers (Ky.) 698.

IV. COURTS OF LIMITED OR INFERIOR JURISDICTION.

Control of action of by superior court by certiorari, see Certiorari, § 14.

§ 159. The grounds of the jurisdiction of inferior tribunals must appear affirmatively on the face of their proceedings.—Sawyer v. Burris (Mo. App.) 321.

§ 163. A contract granting certain rights in oil land held a conveyance of an interest in land, so that the county court had no jurisdiction to enforce by injunction that part of the contract requiring the grantee to deliver to the grantor a portion of all the oil to be produced.—Staley & Barnsdall v. Derden (Tex. Civ. App.) 1136.

§ 169. The constitutional provision, limiting the jurisdiction of the county court to suits where the amount in controversy exceeds $200 and does not exceed $1,000, applies to writs of injunction.—Staley & Barnsdall v. Derden (Tex. Civ. App.) 1136.

§ 170. To confer jurisdiction on the county court to enforce a contract whereby defendant, in consideration of a grant of the oil in certain land, agreed to give plaintiff a portion of the oil to be produced, it was necessary to allege the value of such oil to be within the limits prescribed by the constitutional provisions regulating the jurisdiction of the court.—Staley & Barnsdall v. Derden (Tex. Civ. App.) 1136.

§ 178. Under Const. §§ 142, 143, and Ky. St. 1909, §§ 1086, 3513 (Russell's St. §§ 3100, 1526), a police court held to have no jurisdiction of an action for injunction.—Brady v. Brannon (Ky.) 679.

§ 180. Under Const. § 139, and Ky. St. 1909, § 1051 (Russell's St. § 3126), held, a quarterly court has no jurisdiction of an action for injunction.—Brady v. Brannon (Ky.) 679.

§ 183. The county court is of statutory origin, and has no common-law or equitable jurisdiction.—State ex rel. Sanks v. Johnson (Mo. App.) 780.

VI. COURTS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

(A) Grounds of Jurisdiction in General.

§ 207. Under Const. Amend. 1884, § 4 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 244), and Rev. St. 1899, § 1598 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1194) the Springfield Court of Appeals held to possess original jurisdiction to issue the writ of certiorari and other remedial writs.—State ex rel. Sanks v. Johnson (Mo. App.) 780.

(B) Courts of Particular States.

§ 223. The court held not to have jurisdiction on appeal, irrespective of amount involved, in an attachment proceeding, in which a lien is sought on personal property.—H. Krish Co. v. Rigsby (Ky.) 479.

§ 223. The amount in controversy held less than $200, required by Ky. St. 1909, § 950 (Russell's St. § 2784), to give jurisdiction on appeal.—H. Krish Co. v. Rigsby (Ky.) 479.

§ 223. The action held one for recovery of money or personal property, within Ky. St. 1909, § 950 (Russell's St. § 2784), as to jurisdiction of appeal.—H. Krish Co. v. Rigsby (Ky.) 479.

§ 223. In an action against a railroad for injury to a passway, title to the passway held not involved so as to give the Court of Appeals jurisdiction of an appeal.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Major (Ky.) 646.

§ 231. Before the Supreme Court can entertain an appeal on the ground that title to real estate is involved, within Const. § 12 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 218), the record must show that the title to the real estate mentioned in the pleadings will be directly affected by the judgment to be rendered.—Turner v. Morris (Mo.) 9.

§ 231. An appeal from a judgment in replevin held not to lie to the Supreme Court on the ground that title to real estate is involved, within Const. art. 6, § 12 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 218).—Turner v. Morris (Mo.) 9.

§ 231. A decree dismissing a suit to cancel a contract and a deed to certain real estate is appealable to the Supreme Court as involving title to land.—Haydon v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 15.

§ 231. Supreme Court held to have jurisdiction of a case as involving over $4,500, under Rev. St. 1899, § 1649a, added by Laws 1901, p. 107 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1208).—McCoy v. Randall (Mo.) 31.

§ 231. The Court of Appeals held authorized to issue certiorari to review an order of the county court contracting for the employment of one convicted of violating Rev. St. 1899, § 1838 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1277), notwithstanding Const. art. 6, § 12, and Amend. 1884, § 5 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 218, 244).—State ex rel. Sanks v. Johnson (Mo. App.) 780.

VII. UNITED STATES COURTS.

(B) Jurisdiction Dependent on Nature of Subject-Matter.

§ 289. A complaint in an action against a carrier, in a state court, held not objectionable as raising a question of interstate commerce, over which federal courts alone have jurisdiction.—Porter v. Pecos & N. T. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 897.

(K) Territorial and Provisional Courts.

Presumptions as to continuance of rules of construction of territorial court after admission of territory as a state, see Evidence, § 67.

§ 428. The territorial courts which existed in the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory before the admission into the Union of Oklahoma as a state formed no part of the judicial system provided for in the federal Constitution, and such courts ceased to have any further existence on the admission of the state into the Union.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Parsley (Tex. Civ. App.) 226.

VIII. CONCURRENT AND CONFLICTING JURISDICTION, AND COMITY.

(A) Courts of Same State, and Transfer of Causes.

§ 480. Civ. Code Prac. §§ 284, 285, have no application where the injunction sought is only incidental to a suit to have an ordinance declared invalid, and the circuit court has jurisdiction.—Arnett v. Cardwell (Ky.) 964.

§ 480. Rev. St. 1895, art. 2996, relating to suits to enjoin execution of judgment, construed.—Kruegel v. Rawlins (Tex. Civ. App.) 216.

§ 488. Where the parties to an action at law did not object to the transfer thereof to the chancery court, and did not object to the chancery court entertaining and trying the action, any objection to the transfer was waived, and the chancery court had jurisdiction to try and determine the action.—Blake v. Scott (Ark.) 1054.

XIII. MOTIONS FOR NEW TRIAL AND IN ARREST.

§ 941. Newly discovered evidence, merely cumulative of the evidence of accused, does not justify a new trial.—Douglass v. State (Ark.) 923.

§ 942. Evidence simply of an impeaching character is not such newly discovered evidence as will warrant a new trial.—Morris v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 1112.

§ 943. Newly discovered evidence, simply contradictory of testimony of the state, does not justify a new trial.—Douglass v. State (Ark.) 923.

XV. APPEAL AND ERROR, AND CERTIORARI.

(A) Form of Remedy, Jurisdiction, and Right of Review.

§ 1020. Under Cr. Code Prac. § 347, held, that there is no appeal to the Court of Appeals from a judgment for a fine of $50 and 10 days' imprisonment.—Noe v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 421.

(B) Presentation and Reservation in Lower Court of Grounds of Review.

§ 1037. Alleged improper argument by the commonwealth's attorney pointed out for the first time on a motion for new trial will not be considered.—Burch v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 996.

§ 1038. Failure to charge on alibi is not ground for reversal unless appellant requested a special instruction on that question.—Phillips v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 1110.

§ 1056. Misdirecting in respect to the punishment held not available, unless excepted to at the time or challenged in the motion for new trial.—Robbins v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 504.

1056. Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 723, held that, to predicate error on the charge, it must have been excepted to either on the trial or in a motion for new trial.—Gracy v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 705.

§ 1063. Without a motion for new trial, the commonwealth cannot appeal from a judgment of dismissal in a misdemeanor case.—Commonwealth v. Rudisie (Ky.) 466.

§ 1063. Misdirecting in respect to the punishment held not available, unless excepted to at the time or challenged in the motion for new trial.—Robbins v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 504.

§ 1063. Errors in instructions must be reserved in a motion for a new trial in order to be available on appeal.—Harvey v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 605.

§ 1064. Exceptions to evidence held waived by not being brought forward in the motion for new trial.—Eno v. State (Ark.) 732.

§ 1064. An allegation in a motion for new trial held too general to require consideration of a certain question on appeal.—Bluitt v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 168.

§ 1064. A ground of motion for new trial held not sufficient to point out misdirection in the charge as to the punishment, so as to make the error available on appeal.—Robbins v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 504.

§ 1064. Where no complaint of the court's charge is made in the motion for new trial, as required by Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 723, alleged error therein will not be considered on appeal.—Benevidas v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 1107.

§ 1065. Without action by the trial court on a motion for a new trial, the commonwealth cannot appeal from a judgment of dismissal in a misdemeanor case.—Commonwealth v. Rudisie (Ky.) 466.

(D) Record and Proceedings Not in Record.

§ 1088. A motion for a new trial cannot be considered as a part of the record, unless it is filed.—Harvey v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 605.

§ 1090. In absence of a statement of facts or bill of exceptions containing the testimony, the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict cannot be reviewed on appeal.—Cassu v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 505.

§ 1090. Objections to the court's action in retiring the jury held not available on appeal, because the matter was not preserved by bill of exceptions.—Lawshe v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 865.

§ 1091. A bill of exceptions to the admission of certain evidence held too indefinite for review.—Todd v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 506.

§ 1091. Bills of exception must be certain, and show clearly the exact question complained of.—Kirkpatrick v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 511.

§ 1092. A bill of exceptions, not signed by the trial judge or in any manner approved, cannot be reviewed.—Todd v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 506.

§ 1092. Where the bills of exceptions are so modified by the court as to deprive accused of what he believes to be fair and correct, he must take the statutory steps to protect himself.—Wooten v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 703.

§ 1100. A statement of facts held insufficient to raise a certain issue.—Bluitt v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 168.

§ 1122. An objection that the court erred in omitting to charge on assault and battery in a prosecution for maliciously cutting and wounding with intent to kill cannot be considered on appeal, in the absence of the evidence.—Gillum v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 445.

(G) Review.

§ 1134. On appeal from judgments of acquittal in prosecutions for obtaining property by false pretenses, and for forgery, the Supreme Court will not determine whether the indictments therein will bar another prosecution for the alleged wrong upon which the present prosecutions were based; the question being only a moot question.—Commonwealth v. Caldwell (Ky.) 480.

§ 1144. Where objection to a statement by the commonwealth's attorney was sustained, it would be presumed that the court admonished the jury not to consider it.—Hoffman v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 690.

§ 1144. Where the bill of exception complaining of the court's action in permitting the state to prove accused's testimony on the examining trial was not definite and clear, it must be presumed that the court ruled correctly, and that it was the sworn testimony of accused that was offered in evidence, and hence admissible.—Kirkpatrick v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 511.

§ 1144. In the absence of a statement of facts, the appellate court will not assume that the charge was prejudicial.—Benevidas v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 1107.

§ 1151. Refusal of a continuance will not be reviewed in the absence of manifest abuse of discretion.—Walker v. State (Ark.) 925.

§ 1151. A continuance is within the discretion of the trial court.—Clampett v. State (Ark.) 934.

§ 1159. The Supreme Court cannot interfere with a conviction supported by some evidence.—Wilson v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 430.

§ 1159. Where the evidence justified submission to the jury, a judgment of conviction will not be reversed because in the opinion of the Court of Appeals a preponderance of the evidence was in favor of accused's innocence.—Hinton v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 434.

§ 1159. The Court of Appeals cannot reverse a conviction which there is any evidence to support.—Burch v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 996.

§ 1160. Cr. Code Prac. § 281, held to preclude the Court of Appeals from reversing a criminal case on the evidence.—Wilson v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 614.

§ 1163. Prejudice to the substantial rights of accused from informality in the verdict must affirmatively appear, in order to justify reversal, where he did not move for a correction before the jury was discharged.—Gillum v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 445.

§ 1163. In matters of procedure and the order calling cases, a reversal will not be granted because of an improper order, unless injury or injustice is clearly shown.—Todd v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 506.

§ 1166. Accused held not prejudiced by the court's denial of a change of venue.—Walker v. State (Ark.) 925.

§ 1166. Accused was not prejudiced by the denial of a continuance for absence of witnesses, where all the facts were testified to by an eyewitness who was produced.—Fulkerson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 1111.

§ 1166½. Error in ordering and summoning of talesmen on an insufficient showing held harmless.—Rasor v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 512.

§ 1167. Action of the court in submitting only the first count of an indictment cured any error it committed in refusing to sustain a motion to require the state to elect which count would be relied on.—Railey v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 1120.

§ 1168. The irregularity of admitting in rebuttal, instead of in chief, certain evidence, held not reversible in view of Cr. Code Prac. § 340.—Collett v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 426.

§ 1168. The Supreme Court will not reverse a conviction where it cannot say that the result was affected by the admission of evidence in rebuttal which should have been introduced in chief.—Collett v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 426.

§ 1169. In a prosecution for homicide, the admission of incompetent evidence held prejudicial to defendant.—Ware v. State (Ark.) 927.

§ 1169. The rule as to when incompetent testimony is prejudicial stated.—Ware v. State (Ark.) 927.

§ 1169. Matters in confession, erroneously admitted, held not prejudicial.—Holt v. State (Ark.) 1072.

§ 1169. Error in admitting confession held not error, in view of other confessions.—Holt v. State (Ark.) 1072.

§ 1169. Error in admitting evidence held cured by instruction to disregard.—Holt v. State (Ark.) 1072.

§ 1169. In a prosecution for burglary, error, if any, in admitting certain evidence held not prejudicial.—Railey v. State, (Tex. Cr. App.) 1120.

§ 1170½. Permitting accused to be asked a certain question as a witness held not reversible error, in view of his answer.—Hart v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 508.

§ 1171. Improper argument of counsel held not ground for reversal.—Hart v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 508.

§ 1172. Accused held not prejudiced by an instruction that, if the jury found him guilty, they should assess his punishment under Ky. St. 1909, § 1167 (Russell's St. § 3177), relating to arson, and not under section 1170 (Russell's St. § 3180), relating to house burning.—Lane v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 486.

§ 1173. Where the uncontradicted testimony, on a trial for perjury, shows that there was corroborating evidence as to some particular false statement, the failure to instruct that there must be corroborating evidence to justify a conviction is not prejudicial error.—Brooks v. State (Ark.) 740.

§ 1173. Failure to affirmatively charge on alibi held not ground for reversal under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, § 723.—Phillips v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 1110.

§ 1173. The entry of several freight cars constituted the same burglary, so that failure in the charge to limit the effect of evidence that other cars had been entered to the showing of intent, etc., could not have injured accused.—Gilbert v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 1126.

§ 1175. Accused held not entitled to complain of a conviction of an assault with intent to rape where the state's evidence, if believed, would have justified a conviction of rape.—Sexton v. State (Ark.) 1075.

(H) Determination and Disposition of Cause.

§ 1184. Where the jury erroneously fixed defendant's punishment at 17 years in penitentiary by lot, the Supreme Court on the Attorney General's suggestion could cure the error by modifying the sentence to the lowest term prescribed for the offense.—Walker v. State (Ark.) 925.

§ 1184. In a prosecution for rape where the uncontradicted evidence shows accused guilty of a lesser degree of the crime of which he was convicted, and judgment is set aside, the cause will be remanded, with directions to set aside the judgment and affirm the judgment convicting him of the lesser crime unless the state elects to take a new trial.—Green v. State (Ark.) 949.

§ 1186. A motion to reverse and remand the cause, not signed nor sworn to, cannot be considered.—Wooten v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 703.

XVII. PUNISHMENT AND PREVENTION OF CRIME.

§ 1210. If a defendant tried for burglary and larceny is acquitted of the burglary and convicted of the larceny, the character of the larceny of which he may be convicted depends entirely on the value of the property stolen.—State v. Nicholas (Mo.) 12.

§ 1210. If a defendant in committing a burglary also commits a larceny, it is immaterial what was the value of the property, and if convicted of both the punishment for the larceny is in addition to that for the burglary by imprisonment in the penitentiary.—State v. Nicholas (Mo.) 12.

§ 1214. Rev. St. 1895, art. 4581, relating to the recovery of penalties imposed on railroads, held not to authorize excessive fines in violation of Const. art. 1, § 13.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 256.

I. EVIDENCE OF DEATH AND OF SURVIVORSHIP.

§ 2. Absence of an heir for more than seven years, during which the other heirs partitioned and sold the property without regard to his interest, held not to create a conclusive presumption of his death or bar his right to recover his interest on his return.—Grimes v. Miller (Mo.) 21.

§ 5. In the absence of evidence, the presumption is that persons killed in a common disaster died at the same time.—Walton & Co. v. Burchel (Tenn.) 391.

II. ACTIONS FOR CAUSING DEATH.

(A) Right of Action and Defenses.

§ 17. The negligent failure of a telephone company to connect a messenger dispatched to call a doctor with the doctor's telephone held too remote to constitute it a proximate cause of an injured person's death.—Evans' Adm'r v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. (Ky.) 959.

§ 29. The right of a minor to care, support, and maintenance is not a property right, and when deprived thereof by the wrongful killing of his parent, and the minor dies before collecting damages, his cause of action under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2864, 2865 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 1637, 1644), would not survive under sections 96 and 97 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 369, 370), in favor of his executor or administrator.—Gilkeson v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 138.

§ 31. At common law no action lies for an injury resulting in death, and an administrator is not entitled to sue therefor under Rev. St. 1899, § 2864 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637), giving a right of action to the husband or wife of the deceased or his minor child or children.—Gilkeson v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 138.

§ 31. Where a father and son, killed in a common disaster, died at the same time, the right of action for the death of the son survived to his mother, brothers, and sisters.—Walton & Co. v. Burchel (Tenn.) 391.

(B) Jurisdiction, Venue, and Limitations.

(D) Pleading and Evidence.

§ 57. Where the petition in a death action specifically charges certain particular acts of negligence which are alleged to have been the cause of the death, plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon the specific charges alleged.—Evans v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo.) 36.

(E) Damages, Forfeiture, or Fine.

§ 99. In an action for a fireman's death by a collision of his engine with box cars, evidence held to sustain a verdict for plaintiff of $10,000.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Holt (Tex. Civ. App.) 581.

§ 101. Where the evidence made it an issue in a death action whether each plaintiff had suffered loss from decedent's death, and the verdict for plaintiffs as a whole was not complained of as excessive, defendant cannot complain that the amount apportioned to one of plaintiffs was excessive.—Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Alexander (Tex. Civ. App.) 602.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(A) Nature and Essentials of Conveyances in General.

§ 3. The common-law rule of livery of seisin is not in force in Arkansas.—Moore v. Sharpe (Ark.) 341; Morris v. Fontaine (Ark.) 347; Hurst v. Lund, Id.

§ 6. That an instrument is not acknowledged in a manner to authorize its registration held a circumstance tending to show that the parties did not intend it to be a completed conveyance.—Lipscomb v. Fuqua (Tex. Civ. App.) 193.

§ 25. A deed construed, and held not a mere quitclaim, but to convey the land described.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

(B) Form and Contents of Instruments.

§ 41. Description in a deed may be made sufficient by reference to another recorded deed, or a recorded judgment or decree.—Kimbell v. Powell (Tex. Civ. App.) 541.

§ 41. In order to identify and render definite the description in a registered deed, resort may be had to an unrecorded district court judgment referred to in such deed.—Kimbell v. Powell (Tex. Civ. App.) 541.

(C) Execution.

§ 45. A variance in the names of the grantors in a deed as signed and their names recited in the premises held immaterial.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

(D) Delivery.

§ 56. The death of grantor removes all authority to thereafter deliver the deed.—Givens v. Ott (Mo.) 23.

§ 58. Held, that there was no delivery of a deed during the lifetime of grantor.—Givens v. Ott (Mo.) 23.

II. RECORDING AND REGISTRATION.

§ 86. A deed is not properly registered unless the record shows that the acknowledgment is sufficient.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

III. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

(A) General Rules of Construction.

§ 90. A deed must be construed as a whole to ascertain the intention of the grantor.—Waldermeyer v. Loebig (Mo.) 75.

§ 93. The intent of parties to a deed must be given effect, and, to that end, that is certain which can be made certain.—Hubbard v. Whitehead (Mo.) 69.

§ 95. Where a word in a deed is misspelled, the court will construe the deed according to the meaning of the word intended.—Baustic v. Phillips (Ky.) 629.

§ 95. The intention of the parties to a deed must be arrived at from the language used therein in the absence of any mistake or oversight of the draftsman.—Hudson's Heirs v. Hudson's Adm'r (Ky.) 973.

§ 96. Recitals in a deed concerning former conveyances held sufficient prima facie to establish the facts stated.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

§ 97. The habendum clause in a deed is controlled by the caption and granting clause, unless it appears from the language of the whole deed that it was intended that the habendum clause should control or limit the right taken under the caption or granting clause.—Hudson's Heirs v. Hudson's Adm'r (Ky.) 973.

§ 99. An instrument referred to in a deed is a part thereof, and the two become one when the court seeks to find the intent of the grantor.—Waldermeyer v. Loebig (Mo.) 75.

(B) Property Conveyed.

§ 111. In determining whether a deed was intended to include lots, held, that the court would consider that immediately upon its delivery grantor gave grantee actual possession of the lots, etc.—Hubbard v. Whitehead (Mo.) 69.

§ 111. Though a deed must so describe the land that it can be identified, the court will put itself in the position of the parties and consider the surrounding circumstances.—Hubbard v. Whitehead (Mo.) 69.

§ 111. A deed must be held to convey the largest estate which the language can be construed to convey.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

§ 114. A recital that the grantors in a deed were heirs of M. held mere descriptio personæ, and that the deed should be construed to pass all the grantor's title from every source acquired, and was not limited to their rights as heirs of M.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

§ 114. A recital that it was intended to convey all the land inherited by the grantors from G. and wife corrected a misdescription by which part of the land was omitted.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

§ 114. An instrument held to convey grantor's one-half interest in all lands owned by him in the state from whatever source title was derived.—Merrill v. Bradley (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

(D) Exceptions and Reservations.

Reservations of timber, see Logs and Logging, § 2.

(E) Conditions and Restrictions.

§ 144. Courts will construe clauses in deeds as covenants rather than as conditions if they can reasonably do so.—Haydon v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 15.

§ 168. Under Kirby's Dig. §§ 736, 737, a grantor in a conditional deed may, on condition broken, declare a forfeiture by conveying the land to another who obtains title.—Moore v. Sharpe (Ark.) 341; Morris v. Fontaine (Ark.) 347; Hurst v. Lund, Id.

§ 168. The right of re-entry for condition broken was not assignable at common law, and could only be exercised by the grantor or by his privies in blood.—Moore v. Sharpe (Ark.) 341; Morris v. Fontaine (Ark.) 347; Hurst v. Lund, Id.

§ 168. At common law to forfeit a conditional freehold estate for condition broken, a re-entry was essential.—Moore v. Sharpe (Ark.) 341; Morris v. Fontaine (Ark.) 347; Hurst v. Lund, Id.

IV. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

Best and secondary evidence, see Evidence, § 159.

§ 210. Evidence held to sustain a decree canceling a deed from plaintiff to her daughter on the ground of want of consideration.—Diuguid v. Roberts (Ky.) 464.

§ 211. Evidence held to sustain a decree canceling a deed from plaintiff to her daughter on the ground of undue influence.—Diuguid v. Roberts (Ky.) 464.

§ 211. Evidence held not to support a finding that grantor knew what he was doing when he executed a deed in articulo mortis.—Givens v. Ott (Mo.) 23.

IV. RELEVANCY, MATERIALITY, AND COMPETENCY IN GENERAL.

(A) Facts in Issue and Relevant to Issues.

§ 99. Evidence that an attorney, consulted with a view of employing him to bring the suit in question, did not bring it is irrelevant and immaterial.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Duncan (Tex. Civ. App.) 362.

(B) Res Gestæ.

§ 121. In an action for the death of an employé engaged in putting fuel oil in an engine tender, by slipping on a greasy fuel box lid in descending from the tender, testimony that decedent was slow and awkward in filling the tender, and the engineer told him to hurry, and that he was delaying the engine, was admissible as res gestæ.—Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Alexander (Tex. Civ. App.) 602.

§ 127. Statements of bodily pain and suffering are admissible, if res gestæ, or the natural and usual expressions indicating present pain.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Wiley (Ky.) 402.

§ 128. Statements of bodily pain and suffering are admissible, if made to a physician to enable him to prescribe.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Wiley (Ky.) 402.

(C) Similar Facts and Transactions.

In actions for injuries to passengers, see Carriers, § 317.

§ 132. In an action for injuries to a pedestrian by defect in a city sidewalk, evidence as to plaintiff's habit of drunkenness was inadmissible on the issue whether plaintiff was intoxicated at the time of the injury.—City of Madisonville v. Stewart (Ky.) 421.

(D) Materiality.

§ 144. The testimony of a witness as to the number of bales that could have been ginned, if there had been no delay in installing a press in a gin, held inadmissible because uncertain.—Reagan Round Bale Co. v. Dickson Car Wheel Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 526.

(E) Competency.

§ 155. Where, in an action against an executor charging his testator with the burning of plaintiff's house, plaintiff offered proof attacking the testator's general character, the court properly allowed defendant to show in what respect his moral character was bad.—Ratliff v. Daniel's Ex'r (Ky.) 1034.

V. BEST AND SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

§ 158. The written rules of a company held the best evidence thereof.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearcy (Ky.) 1037.

§ 159. Where the testimony of a witness showed that a deed was in existence and that inquiry of a certain person would show where it was, it was error to permit witness to testify as to the execution of such deed.—Merrill v. Bradley (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

§ 165. Where the testimony of a witness showed that a deed was in existence, and that inquiry of a certain person would show where it was, it was error to permit witness to testify as to the contents of such deed.—Merrill v. Bradley (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

VII. ADMISSIONS.

(A) Nature, Form, and Incidents in General.

§ 205. In an action on open accounts, certain evidence held admissible to establish the correctness of the accounts.—Stadtler v. South Texas Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 1132.

§ 208. A pleading filed by plaintiffs, in which a void deed was set up as the source of M.'s title, held admissible against them as an admission.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

(C) By Grantors, Former Owners, or Privies.

§ 231. Statements made in the absence of defendant held admissible.—Guion Mercantile Co. v. Campbell (Ark.) 164.

VIII. DECLARATIONS.

(A) Nature, Form, and Incidents in General.

§ 271. Declarations of a decedent as to his ancestor's service in the Texas army held admissible.—Kirby v. Boaz (Tex. Civ. App.) 223.

§ 271. Evidence of a witness, who had observed plaintiff before and after his injury, that, subsequent thereto, he saw plaintiff try to do certain work, which he failed to accomplish, held not objectionable.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Adams (Tex. Civ. App.) 876.

IX. HEARSAY.

§ 314. Evidence of plaintiff's complaint of pain and soreness in his back held not objectionable as hearsay.—Pecos & N. T. R. Co. v. Coffman (Tex. Civ. App.) 218.

§ 317. Certain evidence held properly excluded as hearsay.—Hurley & Ross v. Oliver (Ark.) 920.

§ 317. Certain testimony held mostly hearsay.—Jenkins v. Clopton (Mo. App.) 759.

§ 317. Evidence that a witness had investigated defendants' claim to the land in controversy, and had told them they could not recover the land, held inadmissible.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

§ 320. Testimony as to pedigree held properly admitted, where it was based, not only on self-serving declarations of decedent, but also on declarations of his wife, who had no interest.—Kirby v. Boaz (Tex. Civ. App.) 223.

§ 320. A sheriff's deed more than 30 years old, reciting a sale under a certain execution, held conclusive evidence of the issuance of the execution as recited.—Gillean v. Witherspoon (Tex. Civ. App.) 909.

X. DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

(A) Public or Official Acts, Proceedings, Records, and Certificates.

Admissibility of replevin bond as evidence in action for replevin, see Replevin, § 71.

(D) Production, Authentication, and Effect.

§ 370. In a suit to partition lands in which plaintiffs claimed an undivided one-half interest, the fact that the suit was a partition suit did not authorize the admission of a deed under which plaintiffs claimed title without proof of its execution and without the three days' filing and notice to defendants required by statute.—Merrill v. Bradley (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

XI. PAROL OR EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS.

(A) Contradicting, Varying, or Adding to Terms of Written Instrument.

§ 399. Evidence of antecedent verbal representations held inadmissible where the parties executed a written contract without fraud or mistake.—Hartford Mill Co. v. Hartford Tobacco Warehouse Co. (Ky.) 477.

§ 417. In an action against a bank and a vendor to recover money deposited by a purchaser, held, that evidence that the vendor was to furnish the purchaser an abstract of title was legitimate, as against the contention that the evidence added to and changed the written contract.—Hunter v. Wallace (Tex. Civ. App.) 180.

§ 419. Under Ky. St. 1909, § 470 (Russell's St. § 1775), the recited consideration of a conveyance may be shown to be otherwise by parol evidence.—Stamper v. Cornett (Ky.) 623.

(C) Separate or Subsequent Oral Agreement.

§ 443. Certain parol evidence held not inadmissible as varying or contradicting written contracts.—Burgie v. Bailey (Ark.) 266.

(D) Construction or Application of Language of Written Instrument.

§ 460. Where a petition applied for an order prohibiting the sale of liquor within three miles of a schoolhouse, parol evidence held admissible to identify the particular building intended.—Thomas v. Burke (Ark.) 1060.

§ 460. Extrinsic evidence held admissible to explain the calls of a deed and apply them to the subject-matter.—Hubbard v. Whitehead (Mo.) 69.

§ 463. A contract between the owner of property and one whom defendant real estate brokers procured to exchange property with the owner held not ambiguous so that plaintiffs could not show by parol that defendants' right to commissions depended upon the consummation of the contract of exchange.—Lewis v. Mansfield Grain & Elevator Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 585.

XII. OPINION EVIDENCE.

(A) Conclusions and Opinions of Witnesses in General.

§ 471. Evidence that prior to the accident plaintiff was well, but that afterwards he had an impediment in his walk, held not objectionable as a conclusion.—Pecos & N. T. R. Co. v. Coffman (Tex. Civ. App.) 218.

§ 471. Evidence of plaintiff's wife, as to his unsuccessful attempt to assist her in certain work after his injury, held not objectionable as a conclusion.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Adams (Tex. Civ. App.) 876.

§ 473. The inferences to be drawn from facts are for the jury, not a witness.—Hurley & Ross v. Oliver (Ark.) 920.

§ 497. Evidence as to the amount of loss in an action against a carrier, for damages resulting from negligence in transporting a shipment of cattle, held not an opinion of the witness.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Henson (Tex. Civ. App.) 1127.

(B) Subjects of Expert Testimony.

§ 528. A physician may give his opinion as to whether plaintiff's condition is permanent or temporary.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Wiley (Ky.) 402.

(C) Competency of Experts.

§ 537. A physician who had studied a particular disease as to which he is called to testify is qualified, though he has not made a specialty thereof or treated a patient therefor.—Pecos & N. T. R. Co. v. Coffman (Tex. Civ. App.) 218.

§ 537. Refusal to permit a medical expert to testify to an opinion as to whether plaintiff was suffering from a particular disease held an abuse of discretion.—Pecos & N. T. R. Co. v. Coffman (Tex. Civ. App.) 218.

Digitized by Google

(D) Examination of Experts.

§ 548. A physician who has examined an injured party merely to testify in his favor as a witness may not express an expert opinion based on subjective symptoms and fortify his opinion by acts and statements of the injured party which were purely voluntary.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Wiley (Ky.) 402.

§ 548. An expert opinion based on objective symptoms or on a hypothesis propounded is admissible.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Wiley (Ky.) 402.

§ 553. A hypothetical question assuming a fact not proved held improper.—Pecos & N. T. R. Co. v. Coffman (Tex. Civ. App.) 218.

§ 556. Physicians may describe the symptoms of a complaint in issue as given by accepted medical authorities.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Wiley (Ky.) 402.

Necessity for purpose of review, see Appeal and Error, § 544; Criminal Law, §§ 1090–1092.
Taking exceptions at trial, see Criminal Law, § 845; Trial, § 79.

I. NATURE, FORM, AND CONTENTS IN GENERAL.

§ 1. Statement of office of bill of exceptions.—Hanson v. Anderson (Ark.) 736.

§ 6. Record entries as such cannot be preserved in a bill of exceptions, as that is not its function.—Flanagan Milling Co. v. City of St. Louis (Mo.) 112.

§ 8. A bill of exceptions to the admission of evidence must be limited to the particular objection made.—Maricle v. McAlister Fuel Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 221.

§ 24. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 728 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 720), an appeal from a final judgment in dower proceedings does not bring up the evidence at the trial introduced at a former term leading up to an interlocutory judgment, unless both the evidence and the exceptions were preserved by timely term bill of exceptions.—Reineman v. Larkin (Mo.) 307.

II. SETTLEMENT, SIGNING, AND FILING.

Computation of time for filing, fractions of a day, see Time, § 11.

§ 38. A previous order held required to authorize the filing of statements of fact and bills of exception within 10 days after adjournment of the court.—Kimbell v. Powell (Tex. Civ. App.) 541.

III. ISSUANCE, FORM, AND REQUISITES OF WRIT.

§ 97. In the absence of proof, it is presumed that the clerk of the circuit court issued an execution under the direction of the person controlling it, and when once issued, and delivered to the officer, the clerk loses control of it.—Johnson v. Scott (Ky.) 695.

V. STAY, QUASHING, VACATING, AND RELIEF AGAINST EXECUTION.

§ 172. Rev. St. 1895, art. 2991, limiting time within which suit for injunction staying execution may be brought, construed.—Kruegel v. Rawlins (Tex. Civ. App.) 216.

Digitized by Google

§ 283. In trespass to try title to land sold under execution, the court held to have erred in submitting to the jury as a controverted issue of fact whether an execution had been in fact issued on which the property was sold; the record proof thereof being conclusive.—Gillean v. Witherspoon (Tex. Civ. App.) 909.

XI. EXECUTION AGAINST THE PERSON.

§ 436. Where a capias issued by the clerk of the circuit court or his deputy has been received by the sheriff or his deputy, neither the clerk nor his deputy may, without an order of court, correct any mistake as to the amount thereof, nor direct its return to the clerk's office.—Johnson v. Scott (Ky.) 695.

§ 440. The officer, in executing a precept commanding him to arrest an individual, may select such time of day as he thinks most expedient, and may use so much force as is necessary.—Johnson v. Scott (Ky.) 695.

§ 441. The officer, to whom a writ for the arrest of a judgment debtor is directed, must, after arresting the debtor, retain him in custody until the judgment has been satisfied or the debtor has been discharged by due process of law.—Johnson v. Scott (Ky.) 695.

IV. COLLECTION AND MANAGEMENT OF ESTATE.

(A) In General.

§ 121. Under Ky. St. 1909, §§ 3891, 3892 (Russell's St. §§ 3937, 3938), a will providing for sale of real estate for purpose of division and naming no executor, the administrator with the will annexed has the power of sale.—Evans v. Evans (Ky.) 619.

V. ALLOWANCES TO SURVIVING WIFE, HUSBAND, OR CHILDREN.

Adverse possession by widow claiming right of quarantine, see Adverse Possession, § 62.

VIII. SALES AND CONVEYANCES UNDER ORDER OF COURT.

(A) When Authorized.

§ 330. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 489, indivisible real estate may be sold in a suit to settle the owner's estate.—Oldham v. McElroy (Ky.) 414.

(B) Application and Order.

§ 351. Where land belonging to a deceased co-tenant is sold to pay debts, the court should not collect the sale bonds, in excess of the share of the surviving co-tenant and enough to pay debts and administration expenses, without requiring a bond, under Civ. Code Prac. § 493.—Oldham v. McElroy (Ky.) 414.

§ 351. On the sale of real estate belonging to a decedent to pay debts, failure to execute the bond required by Civ. Code Prac. § 493, in which infants are interested, is sold to pay debts, a lien on the infants' share of the surplus is retained until bond is executed, under Civ. Code Prac. §§ 493, 497.—Oldham v. McElroy (Ky.) 414.

§ 351. Civ. Code Prac. § 493, requiring a bond on behalf of infants, held inapplicable to sales of an ancestor's realty to pay debts.—Oldham v. McElroy (Ky.) 414.

EXEMPTIONS.

See Homestead.

III. WAIVER OR FORFEITURE.

§ 89. A right of exemption is a personal privilege, and may be waived by the debtor.—Parketon v. Pugsley (Mo. App.) 789.

§ 98. Where a debtor waived his right of exemption under Rev. St. 1899, § 3159 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1795), and failed to select property as exempt under section 3162, there was a failure to impress the character of exempt property on his property.—Parketon v. Pugsley (Mo. App.) 789.

IV. PROTECTION AND ENFORCEMENT OF RIGHTS.

Liability on official bond of constable selling exempt property under execution, see Sheriffs and Constables, § 157.

§ 119. While a judgment debtor may waive his exemption, the statute does not require him to notify the sheriff before the execution sale or before the execution of the indemnity bond that he claims the property as exempt.—Winstead v. Hicks (Ky.) 1018.

§ 126. A demand by an execution debtor that the officer set off his exemptions in lieu of property exempt by Rev. St. 1899, § 3159, subds. 1, 2 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1795), held not to render any portion of the property exempt.—Parketon v. Pugsley (Mo. App.) 789.

§ 126. Where property is specifically exempted by statute, it continues to be such until the right thereto is waived, but where it is rendered exempt only by virtue of selection of the debtor, he must select in under the statute.—Parketon v. Pugsley (Mo. App.) 789.

§ 126. A debtor asserting his right of exemption under Rev. St. 1899, § 3162 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1797), held to thereby waive his right to claim property exempt by section 3159, subds. 1, 2.—Parketon v. Pugsley (Mo. App.) 789.

§ 133. In the absence of fraud operating to defeat the exemption right, plaintiff in execution is liable to respond only as for a trespass, when he has directed a levy on or sale of exempt property.—Parketon v. Pugsley (Mo. App.) 789.

§ 137. The giving of an indemnity bond to an officer holding an execution does not prevent the debtor claiming as exempt the property levied on from maintaining an action against the sheriff or the purchaser to recover the property.—Winstead v. Hicks (Ky.) 1018.

§ 138. Where an officer seizes exempt property and retains possession thereof, replevin or claim and delivery will lie therefor.—Parketon v. Pugsley (Mo. App.) 789.

§ 139. An officer seizing and selling property absolutely exempt may be sued either in trespass or in trover for conversion.—Parketon v. Pugsley (Mo. App.) 789.

§ 139. To sustain an action against the execution plaintiff for directing an officer to sell exempt property, it is essential that the property is specifically exempt, or is within the protection of the statute.—Parketon v. Pugsley (Mo. App.) 789.

§ 146. A plaintiff in execution, who directs an officer to levy on and seize exempt property, is liable in trespass or conversion, and the execution defendant may sue him alone, or sue him and the officer jointly.—Parketon v. Pugsley (Mo. App.) 789.

§ 149. In an action by an execution debtor against the sheriff or the purchaser at execution sale of exempt property, the measure of damages is the same as in detinue, viz., the value of the use of the property, plus its deterioration and necessary expense in recovering it.—Winstead v. Hicks (Ky.) 1018.

I. CIVIL LIABILITY.

(A) Acts Constituting False Imprisonment and Liability Therefor.

§ 3. False imprisonment lies where the imprisonment is without legal authority, and, where it is valid or apparently so, the remedy is by malicious prosecution.—Roberts v. Thomas (Ky.) 961.

§ 7. An action for trespass lies where a person has been arrested on a process irregularly issued and void; but a process merely voidable is, until set aside, a justification for an arrest made thereunder.—Johnson v. Scott (Ky.) 695.

§ 7. An action for false imprisonment does not lie for an arrest or imprisonment in due course or regular proceedings of a court having jurisdiction of the offense.—Johnson v. Scott (Ky.) 695.

FALSE PRETENSES.

Moot questions as not constituting ground for review, see Criminal Law, § 1134.

§ 7. Under Ky. St. 1909, § 1208 (Russell's St. § 3474), punishing the obtaining of money, etc., by false pretenses, a statement made by a minor that he is of age, resulting in inducing another to part with money, held a false statement within the statute.—Commonwealth v. Ferguson (Ky.) 967.

§ 30. An indictment in a prosecution for obtaining money and property by false pretenses held defective for not alleging that accused did not own the property which it was alleged he pretended to own in order to wrongfully obtain property from another.—Commonwealth v. Caldwell (Ky.) 480.

§ 36. Under Ky. St. 1909, § 1208 (Russell's St. § 3474), an indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses held not defective for failing to charge that the person to whom the false pretense was made sustained any loss.—Commonwealth v. Ferguson (Ky.) 967.

Kirby's Dig. § 1397, a certain allegation in a complaint in an action to enforce a lien for a fencing assessment held unnecessary, and the assessment is presumed to be valid as against contention that it was made by the board of commissioners, and not by the county court, as provided by section 1388.—Eagle v. Board of Com'rs of Fencing Dist. No. 2, Lonoke County (Ark.) 340.

§ 4. That the cost of a fence was in the first instance paid out of money borrowed by the fencing board on their individual account held not to invalidate an assessment levied to pay such costs.—Eagle v. Board of Com'rs of Fencing Dist. No. 2, Lonoke County (Ark.) 340.

§ 4. Kirby's Dig. § 1399, relating to suits to enforce the collection of fencing assessments, held not to give the right to tax an attorney's fee.—Eagle v. Board of Com'rs of Fencing Dist. No. 2, Lonoke County (Ark.) 340.

§ 7. In an action against an executor charging his testator with the burning of plaintiff's house, plaintiff was properly not allowed to show by an insurance agent that his main witness, living near the house, had renewed a policy of insurance on her property shortly before the fire; there being nothing in his evidence connecting the testator therewith.—Ratliff v. Daniel's Ex'r (Ky.) 1034.

§ 7. In an action against an executor charging his testator with the burning of plaintiff's house, held, that there was nothing in the evidence tending to show that his testator procured or induced any one else to set fire to the building.—Ratliff v. Daniel's Ex'r (Ky.) 1034.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

I. CIVIL LIABILITY.

§ 6. While title cannot be tried in a forcible entry proceeding, possession can be.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 6. It is not competent to try title in forcible entry, but in whom the legal title was vested at the time of entry is necessary to be ascertained, where on that alone depends the question whether plaintiff was in actual possession when defendant entered.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 9. The same kind of actual possession that will in time ripen into a good title will maintain an action of forcible entry.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 28. It is always a relevant inquiry on a plea of not guilty in forcible entry proceedings whether plaintiff was in actual possession, as well as whether defendant forcibly entered.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 29. In forcible entry, it was error to exclude evidence for plaintiffs of a survey of land covering that in dispute made for a certain party prior to the patent to defendant's lessor, under whom he claimed the right to enter.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 29. In forcible entry, it was relevant in support of plaintiff's actual possession when defendant entered, that a tract covering the area in dispute was patented, and had been in the actual adverse possession of plaintiff's lessor and its vendors for 15 years prior to the patent to defendant's lessor.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 29. In forcible entry, title papers may be received to show the extent of possession, or to show that it was limited, if they do show it.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 8. To constitute forgery, the name alleged to be forged need not be the name of any person in existence, but may be fictitious.—Maloney v. State (Ark.) 728.

§ 12. A check held capable of working legal injury within the law punishing the uttering of forged instruments.—Maloney v. State (Ark.) 728.

§ 16. Elements of the crime of uttering a forged instrument determined.—Maloney v. State (Ark.) 728.

§ 32. An indictment for uttering a forged check held sufficient.—Maloney v. State (Ark.) 728.

§ 35. The jury, on a trial for uttering a forged instrument, must determine whether the person whose name appears signed to the instrument is real or fictitious; and, where they find that the name is fictitious, the inference arises that accused either forged the instrument, or knew that it was forged.—Maloney v. State (Ark.) 728.

§ 40. On a trial for uttering a forged check, it is competent to show that the person whose name is affixed to the check as drawer is fictitious, by the evidence of the proper officers of the bank on which the check is drawn that no person bearing such name had an account with the bank, or was a customer thereof.—Maloney v. State (Ark.) 728.

§ 44. On a trial for uttering a forged check, certain testimony held not to show that the name affixed to the check as drawer was fictitious.—Maloney v. State (Ark.) 728.

I. DECEPTION CONSTITUTING FRAUD, AND LIABILITY THEREFOR.

§ 12. Promise by a partner to advance more money to the firm if it would execute a mortgage on its property to secure his individual debt held insufficient to sustain a charge of deceit in obtaining the mortgage.—Conaway v. Newman Mill & Lumber Co. (Ark.) 353.

§ 21. A judgment creditor of an insolvent corporation suing incorporators for deceit held

II. ACTIONS.

(B) Parties and Pleading.

§ 48. In an action for injuries from fraudulent representations by incorporators, a separate paragraph in an answer held insufficient to rob defendants of the full benefit secured to them under Rev. St. 1899, § 3422 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1965), by the first paragraph of answer, which was a general denial.—McKee v. Rudd (Mo.) 312.

(C) Evidence.

§ 58. In a suit by a judgment creditor of an insolvent corporation against incorporators for deceit, evidence held insufficient to show that defendants pointed to its charter, and thereby made its representations their own.—McKee v. Rudd (Mo.) 312.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

III. PROMISES TO ANSWER FOR DEBT, DEFAULT OR MISCARRIAGE OF ANOTHER.

§ 23. An agreement held not a collateral undertaking to answer for the default of another, and hence not required to be in writing.—Burgie v. Bailey (Ark.) 266.

IV. REPRESENTATIONS.

§ 38. Rev. St. 1899, § 3422 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1965), held to apply to the representations of incorporators as to the solvency of a corporation, made to one extending it credit, and to prevent recovery thereon when not in writing.—McKee v. Rudd (Mo.) 312.

IX. OPERATION AND EFFECT OF STATUTE.

Parol sale of land as color of title, see Adverse Possession. § 70.

§ 129. Where the lessee of land took actual possession, and made valuable improvements, the case was thereby taken out of the operation of the statutes of frauds.—Reichardt v. Howe (Ark.) 347.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

I. TRANSFERS AND TRANSACTIONS INVALID.

(A) Grounds of Invalidity in General.

§ 20. The lease from wife of lessee and another not being recorded, held its provision for lien of landlords on crop was invalid to the extent of the lien given the wife.—Jones v. Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co. (Ky.) 633.

(I) Retention of Possession or Apparent Title by Grantor.

§ 154. Under Ky. St. § 2128 (Russell's St. § 4631), a surrender of personal property by husband to wife, not reduced to writing or recorded, held invalid against his other creditors.—Jones v. Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co. (Ky.) 633.

II. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES AND PURCHASERS.

(A) Original Parties.

Jones v. Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co. (Ky.) 633.

III. REMEDIES OF CREDITORS AND PURCHASERS.

(G) Evidence.

§ 295. Evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that a deed made by a mortgagor after the debt secured appeared to be barred by limitation, so as to have, under Kirby's Dig. § 5399, only the effect of an unrecorded mortgage as to third persons, was voluntary and fraudulent as against the mortgagee; the mortgage being still binding as an unrecorded mortgage.—Morgan v. Kendrick (Ark.) 278.

§ 299. Evidence held not to show that a conveyance of land was taken in a wife's name by the husband to defraud his creditors.—Hughes v. Jackson (Ky.) 644; Garrison v. Same, Id.

(I) Trial.

§ 309. In an action to set aside fraudulent conveyances, an instruction purporting to state the facts necessary to a finding for plaintiff held erroneous.—Stone v. Stitt (Tex. Civ. App.) 187.

§ 309. A request to charge in a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance held properly refused as ignoring one of the theories of complainant's case.—Stone v. Stitt (Tex. Civ. App.) 187.

II. APPOINTMENT, QUALIFICATION, AND TENURE OF GUARDIAN.

§ 23. An order discharging a guardian on payment of court costs held not an absolute or final discharge.—Gillean v. Witherspoon (Tex. Civ. App.) 909.

III. CUSTODY AND CARE OF WARD'S PERSON AND ESTATE.

§ 42. A power of attorney signed for an infant by his guardian is not binding upon the infant where the guardian was not authorized to bind him thereby.—Merrill v. Bradley (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

§ 54. The action of the court in allowing a ward only 6 per cent. interest on the balance found due from the guardian held not erroneous. —France v. Shockey (Ark.) 1056.

§ 70. A power of attorney signed for an infant by his guardian is not binding upon the infant where the guardian was not authorized to bind him thereby, in absence of ratification on attaining majority.—Merrill v. Bradley (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

§ 70. An instrument executed by one who was an infant when his guardian signed an unauthorized power of attorney for him held not a ratification of such unauthorized act.—Merrill v. Bradley (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

IV. SALES AND CONVEYANCES UNDER ORDER OF COURT.

§ 103. Confirmation of a guardian's sale of his ward's land under order of court, in some form, is necessary to pass title.—Gillean v. Witherspoon (Tex. Civ. App.) 909.

§ 103. A guardian's application to make a specific private sale of his ward's land in accordance with specified terms and the court's order allowing the same held not a confirmation of the sale when completed.—Gillean v. Witherspoon (Tex. Civ. App.) 909.

§ 104. Where a guardian's deed was invalid, the ward, after becoming a married woman, could not ratify and confirm it by accepting a part of the purchase money with full knowledge of the facts.—Gillean v. Witherspoon (Tex. Civ. App.) 909.

§ 105. Where, after conditional discharge of a guardian, the court directed him to sell certain of the ward's land, the order of discharge could not be invoked to annul the order of sale. —Gillean v. Witherspoon (Tex. Civ. App.) 909.

VI. ACCOUNTING AND SETTLEMENT.

§ 150. Under Kirby's Dig. § 3828, the court in proceedings to confirm the final settlement of a guardian held authorized to allow the guardian compensation for his services.—France v. Shockey (Ark.) 1056.

§ 161. The court on appeal held not authorized to disturb the findings of the court in proceedings to confirm a guardian's final settlement, where the abstract of the evidence omits the testimony of the witnesses of the guardian. —France v. Shockey (Ark.) 1056.

§ 161. The court on appeal held not authorized to disturb the action of a court in proceedings to confirm a guardian's settlement allowing a credit of a specified sum for the support of the ward, notwithstanding Kirby's Dig. § 3792.—France v. Shockey (Ark.) 1056.

§ 168. An order of the probate court confirming an annual settlement of a guardian held conclusive unless corrected on appeal or other direct attack.—France v. Shockey (Ark.) 1056.

VIII. LIABILITIES ON GUARDIANSHIP BONDS.

Presumptions as to knowledge by sureties of law governing liabilities of public guardians, see Evidence, § 65.

§ 175. Ky. St. 1909, §§ 3903–3906 (Russell's St. §§ 3924–3927), held to impose upon one person both the duty of public administrator and public guardian, and the fact that the clerk of the court only styled an official "public administrator" in taking his official bond and for his order of appointment did not relieve him of the duty of public guardian; and hence his sureties could not object that they were not bound for his acts in that capacity.—Newman v. Flowers' Guardian (Ky.) 652.

I. ESTABLISHMENT, ALTERATION, AND DISCONTINUANCE.

(B) Establishment by Statute or Statutory Proceedings.

§ 28. Where one of six landowners who had signed a petition for opening a road under Ky. St. 1909, § 4289 (Russell's St. § 5421), died, it was not error to refuse to enter an order of revivor, and continue the case for that purpose.—Story v. Little (Ky.) 1023.

§ 29. Were it necessary that the petition should state that the proposed road was required to enable the petitioners to travel to one of the places named in section 4288, Ky. St. 1909 (Russell's St. § 5420), the defect in failing to so state should have been taken advantage of by demurrer.—Story v. Little (Ky.) 1023.

§ 29. A petition for opening a road which sets forth every fact required by Ky. St. 1909, § 4289 (Russell's St. § 5421), held sufficient without stating that it was required to enable petitioners to travel to one of the places named in section 4288.—Story v. Little (Ky.) 1023.

§ 34. An order establishing a road which fixes the width at 30 feet and makes the line of survey the center is a sufficient compliance with Ky. St. 1909, § 4289 (Russell's St. § 5421), although neither the petition nor the report of the commissioners indicates the width of the proposed road.—Story v. Little (Ky.) 1023.

§ 39. The fact that road commissioners took luncheon with two of the petitioners for a new road held not to invalidate their report, in the absence of testimony showing improper conduct or conversation upon the part of petitioners.—Story v. Little (Ky.) 1023.

§ 41. While road commissioners could not amend their reports under the "General Statutes" under the Kentucky Statutes now in force, road commissioners may amend their report.—Story v. Little (Ky.) 1023.

§ 41. The report of road commissioners held good, though written in the office of the attorneys for petitioners, and though one of the attorneys at the request of the commissioners calculated the amount of ground that would be taken from each landowner for the proposed road.—Story v. Little (Ky.) 1023.

§ 58. Failure of a petition for a highway to state that it was necessary to reach one of the places to provide access to which a road may be established under Ky. St. 1909, § 4288 (Russell's St. § 5420), held immaterial on appeal where the omission was supplied by the commissioners' report.—Story v. Little (Ky.) 1023.

§ 58. Under the direct provisions of Ky. St. 1909, § 4303 (Russell's St. § 5435), the Court of Appeals have jurisdiction only of matters of law arising on the record on appeal in highway opening proceedings.—Story v. Little (Ky.) 1023.

§ 61. Where a party refused to accept damages allowed him by the report of road commissioners, and failed to recover as much either in the county or circuit court, he was not entitled to his costs.—Story v. Little (Ky.) 1023.

II. HIGHWAY DISTRICTS AND OFFICERS.

Imposition of duties of road officers on county commissioners as making them hold two offices, see Officers, § 30.

III. CONSTRUCTION, IMPROVEMENT, AND REPAIR.

§ 107. A public road may be opened under the provision of Ky. St. 1909, § 4289 (Russell's St. § 5421).—Story v. Little (Ky.) 1023.

I. NATURE, ACQUISITION, AND EXTENT.

(E) Liabilities Enforceable Against Homestead.

§ 101. Ky. St. 1909, § 1702 (Russell's St. § 4661), construed, and held to permit a wife, when abandoned, to share in the enjoyment of the homestead.—Nunn v. Page (Ky.) 442.

§ 103. Under Ky. St. 1909, § 900 (Russell's St. § 2687), a judgment against a husband for attorney's fees and costs in a suit for divorce by the wife subsequently dismissed cannot subject to its satisfaction the homestead of the husband exempt within section 1702 (Russell's St. § 4661).—Nunn v. Page (Ky.) 442.

II. TRANSFER OR INCUMBRANCE.

§ 115. Though the wife's name did not appear in the body of the mortgage of a homestead, and it contained no relinquishment of dower, and was not executed in compliance with the homestead statute, yet, where she signed and acknowledged it, it will be effective to create a lien as against her.—Ward v. Stark Bros. (Ark.) 382.

§ 115. An unmarried man may mortgage his homestead, though the same is exempt from execution.—Melton v. Beasley (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 119. A certificate of acknowledgment by a wife to a conveyance of a homestead held sufficient, under Kirby's Dig. § 3901; any defect therein being cured by Act March 20, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 150; Kirby's Dig. §§ 783, 786).—Ward v. Stark Bros. (Ark.) 382.

§ 45. The common-law rule as to the provocation which will reduce a killing to manslaughter held the law of Missouri.—State v. Heath (Mo.) 149.

IV. ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL.

§ 86. A specific intent to take the life of the person assaulted is an essential element of assault to kill, under Kirby's Dig. § 1588.—Chowning v. State (Ark.) 735.

§ 94. In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, it may be shown that accused was so drunk at the time he could not have entertained the necessary intent.—Chowning v. State (Ark.) 735.

V. EXCUSABLE OR JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE.

§ 105. An officer or a private citizen, seeking to prevent a felon escaping, held required to exercise reasonable care to prevent the escape, without doing personal violence to the felon.—Green v. State (Ark.) 727.

§ 113. One, in good faith withdrawing from a difficulty voluntarily engaged in, held entitled to rely on self-defense.—State v. Heath (Mo.) 149.

§ 116. A proper instruction upon self-defense stated.—Wilson v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 430.

§ 120. In a murder case, where it appeared that accused, while in an altercation with decedent, either shot his pistol, or it was discharged, and decedent immediately ran 50 or 100 feet, pursued by accused, who was all the while shooting at him, and who finally shot him in the back, the issue of self-defense was not in the case.—Hart v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 508.

VI. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION.

§ 160. In a murder case, accused may show, in explanation of his possession of a pistol with which he killed decedent, that he had previously been threatened with great personal violence.—State v. Heath (Mo.) 149.

§ 169. In a prosecution for homicide, evidence that witness' two sons, just prior to the shooting, left her house and stated they were about to get fodder for a mule, held inadmissible.—Hoffman v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 690.

§ 183. In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, evidence that thereafter prosecutrix's uncle obtained a check from defendant for $348.05 held inadmissible.—Groszoehmigen v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 1113.

§ 190. In a murder case, certain testimony held properly excluded.—Hart v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 508.

(E) Weight and Sufficiency.

§ 234. Evidence held to sufficiently connect one with the killing of another, so as to justify his conviction of some degree of homicide.—Pickett v. State (Ark.) 732.

§ 234. Where the case against accused was circumstantial only, and he showed that another person, or others, committed the homicide, he was entitled to acquittal, provided he did not assist in the offense.—Wheeler v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 166.

§ 253. Evidence held to sustain a conviction of murder in the first degree.—Hoffman v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 690.

§ 255. Evidence held to justify a verdict of involuntary manslaughter.—Green v. State (Ark.) 727.

(C) Instructions.

Error in instructions cured by giving other instructions, see Criminal Law, § 823.

§ 286. In a murder case, the court held not required to charge on the right of accused to bear arms to protect himself, notwithstanding his evidence explaining his possession of the pistol with which he killed decedent.—State v. Heath (Mo.) 149.

§ 290. As a rule it is not necessary to define deadly weapons in the instructions in a homicide case, unless there is some question as to whether the weapons are of that character.—Wheeler v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 166.

§ 294. In a prosecution, for assault to kill, an instruction on the defense of drunkenness held improperly refused.—Chowning v. State (Ark.) 735.

§ 300. An instruction on self-defense which makes the guilt or innocence of accused dependent on the existence of reasonable grounds of belief that he was in danger, regardless of how the danger appeared to him is erroneous.—Pickett v. State (Ark.) 732.

§ 300. To warrant the court in giving an instruction on the right of accused, on withdrawing in good faith from a difficulty voluntarily entered into, to defend himself, there should be some substantial testimony showing that accused, after the commencement of the difficulty, in good faith sought to withdraw from it.—State v. Heath (Mo.) 149.

§ 300. An instruction, on a trial for the murder of a teacher by a patron of a school, held properly refused because it commented on isolated facts and was argumentative.—State v. Heath (Mo.) 149.

§ 300. An instruction in a homicide case held properly refused because argumentative.—State v. Heath (Mo.) 149.

§ 304. In a prosecution for an assault to murder, an instruction held to sufficiently present the theory of accidental shooting.—Groszoehmigen v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 1113.

§ 307. The court, in a homicide case, must submit the grades of the offense as shown by the testimony of the state and by the testimony of accused, though the testimony of the accused is uncorroborated.—State v. Heath (Mo.) 149.

§ 308. Instruction held to properly define murder in the second degree.—State v. Myers (Mo.) 131.

§ 309. In a homicide case, the failure to charge on manslaughter held reversible error, under the evidence.—Pickett v. State (Ark.) 732.

§ 309. Evidence held to furnish no sufficient basis for an instruction on manslaughter in the fourth degree.—State v. Myers (Mo.) 131.

§ 309. Where the provocation consists of an assault or personal violence sufficient to arouse the heat of passion necessary to reduce the killing to manslaughter, the issue of manslaughter in the fourth degree must be submitted to the jury.—State v. Heath (Mo.) 149.

§ 310. The offense of cutting and wounding in sudden heat or passion, defined by Ky. St. 1909, § 1242 (Russell's St. § 3185), held a degree of the offense of maliciously cutting and wounding with intent to kill, defined by section 1166 (Russell's St. § 3184), so that the court, on an indictment for the latter offense, properly submitted the other also.—Gillum v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 445.

§ 310. Evidence in a prosecution for assault to murder held to necessitate an instruction as to the law of aggravated assault, on the theory that the difficulty was begun by the prosecuting witness.—Heath v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 862.

(D) Verdict.

Manner of arriving at verdict, see Criminal Law, § 866.

§ 313. Under Cr. Code Prac. § 257, subsec. 2, a verdict held to sufficiently indicate that accused was convicted of violating Ky. St. 1909, § 1166 (Russell's St. § 3184), and not section 1242 (Russell's St. § 3185).—Gillum v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 445.

X. APPEAL AND ERROR.

§ 338. Admission of hearsay testimony held highly prejudicial and reversible error.—Wilson v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 430.

§ 338. Evidence that witness' sons, just prior to the shooting, had stated they were going to get fodder for a mule, held not prejudicial to defendant.—Hoffman v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 690.

§ 338. In a murder case, admission of certain evidence held not reversible error.—Hart v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 508.

§ 338. The admission of evidence in a manslaughter case, if error, held harmless, in view of the verdict imposing the minimum punishment for manslaughter.—Davis v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 1108.

§ 339. In a murder case, exclusion of evidence, if error, held harmless.—Hart v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 508.

V. WIFE'S SEPARATE ESTATE.

(A) What Constitutes.

Rights of widow of donee of public land, see Public Lands, § 143.

§ 119. A deed construed, and held to convey the land in controversy to a married woman in her separate right.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

§ 129. A married woman cannot be estopped to assert her rights in land except for fraud, or acts equivalent thereto.—Gillean v. Witherspoon (Tex. Civ. App.) 909.

§ 133. In an action to compel a husband, after his wife's death, to account for certain property and mortgages which were in the name of the wife, evidence held to show that the husband acquired the property and mortgages with his own money, and did not intend to give it to his wife, though he put it in her name.—Carroll v. Carroll (Ark.) 947.

(C) Liabilities and Charges.

§ 169. A mortgage executed by a married woman held sufficiently acknowledged to convey her separate property.—Cazort & McGehee Co. v. Dunbar (Ark.) 270.

(D) Conveyances and Contracts to Convey.

§ 193. A wife's separate deed to her separate land held void.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

§ 198. Neither a grantor under a subsequent deed reciting a void prior deed to her husband nor those claiming under the subsequent deed were estopped to deny the prior deed except against those claiming under it.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

§ 199. A wife's separate deed to her separate land held not cured by subsequent recitals

(A) Nature and Form of Remedy.

§ 5. Scope of remedy by mandatory injunction stated.—Jeff Chaison Town-Site Co. v. McFaddin, Wiess & Kyle Land Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 716.

II. SUBJECTS OF PROTECTION AND RELIEF.

(B) Property, Conveyances, and Incumbrances.

§ 44. Where the judgment of a creditor may be rendered unavailable by a transfer of equitable assets, equity will grant an injunction.—Ball v. Peper Cotton Press Co. (Mo. App.) 798.

§ 52. Where an insolvent lessee, was permitted only to cut timber necessary for clearing the land, and for fences to be used on the land, he should be restrained from cutting the timber to sell.—Reichardt v. Howe (Ark.) 347.

(C) Contracts.

§ 57. An injunction restraining the breach of contract held proper, where the contract may be specifically enforced, and there is no other practicable mode of enforcement.—Pitcock v. State (Ark.) 742.

(E) Public Officers and Boards and Municipalities.

§ 84. The passing of an ordinance, an exercise of legislative function, will not be enjoined.—Slade v. City of Lexington (Ky.) 621.

(G) Personal Rights and Duties.

§ 98. The general rule is that injunction will not lie to restrain the publication of a libel, especially in view of the guaranty of liberty of speech in Const. art. 1, § 8.—Mitchell v. Grand Lodge Free & Accepted Masons of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 178.

III. ACTIONS FOR INJUNCTIONS.

Amount in controversy as determining jurisdiction, see Courts, § 169.

§ 110. District courts, as courts of general jurisdiction, are empowered by law to issue and try injunctions.—Kruegel v. Rawlins (Tex. Civ. App.) 216.

IV. PRELIMINARY AND INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTIONS.

(A) Grounds and Proceedings to Procure.

§ 132. Doctrine that it is not the function of a preliminary injunction to transfer the possession of land from one person to another pending an adjudication of the title does not apply where the effect of the injunction is only to restore plaintiff's possession, which had been forcibly invaded, and preserve the status until the party's rights could be determined.—Jeff Chaison Town-Site Co. v. McFaddin, Wiess & Kyle Land Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 716.

§ 134. Where the rights of the parties in an action for an injunction are doubtful, the court should look at the balance of convenience, and act upon the consideration of the comparative inconvenience which may arise from granting or withholding the injunction.—Jeff Chaison Town-Site Co. v. McFaddin, Wiess & Kyle Land Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 716.

§ 136. Certain facts held to warrant granting of a temporary prohibitive injunction forbidding interference with canal.—Jeff Chaison Town-Site Co. v. McFaddin, Wiess & Kyle Land Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 716.

(B) Continuing, Modifying, Vacating, or Dissolving.

Appealability of order refusing to dissolve, see Appeal and Error, § 71.

Filing motion to dissolve as waiver of right to appeal from order granting injunction, see Appeal and Error, § 165.

§ 163. Reformation of order granting an injunction allowed, where it grants a permanent injunction without notice, but the writ issued is in form a temporary injunction until the hearing.—Jeff Chaison Town-Site Co. v. McFaddin, Wiess & Kyle Land Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 716.

V. PERMANENT INJUNCTION AND OTHER RELIEF.

§ 192. In an action to restrain the seller of a business from engaging in a competing business, in violation of his contract of sale, the decree should enjoin defendant only, and not the other members of the firm of which he is a partner.—Bloom v. Home Ins. Agency (Ark.) 293.

VII. VIOLATION AND PUNISHMENT.

§ 219. Where the court had jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter of the cause of action in which the injunction was issued, the fact that it was erroneously or improvidently issued does not excuse disobedience by those bound by it.—Pitcock v. State (Ark.) 742.

§ 219. A final decree rendered by a court without jurisdiction may be disobeyed with impunity.—Pitcock v. State (Ark.) 742.

§ 219. A court possesses the power of determining its jurisdiction, and while so doing may require the parties to preserve the existing status of the subject-matter, unless the pleadings show on their face that the court is wholly without jurisdiction of the subject-matter.—Pitcock v. State (Ark.) 742.

§ 221. Under Kirby's Dig. § 3984, actual notice of the issuance of an injunction, without formal service of the writ, held sufficient to put one violating it in contempt of court.—Pitcock v. State (Ark.) 742.

§ 230. The court, in proceeding to enforce by contempt a temporary injunction, need not consider the merits of the controversy or whether the injunction was properly granted.—Ft. Worth Driving Club v. Ft. Worth Fair Ass'n (Tex. Civ. App.) 213.

§ 25. An application to vacate a lunacy decree must be made to the court granting it, and is not within the jurisdiction of a court of another county.—Upton's Committee v. Bush (Ky.) 1005; Same v. Gaddie, Id.

III. GUARDIANSHIP.

§ 30. Ky. St. § 2156 (Russell's St. § 4247), providing for lunacy inquisitions and the appointment of committees, applies only to persons who are incompetent by reason of mental unsoundness or imbecility.—Upton's Committee v. Bush (Ky.) 1005; Same v. Gaddie, Id.

§ 30. A verdict finding defendant incompetent to manage his estate held insufficient to warrant the appointment of a committee for him.—Upton's Committee v. Bush (Ky.) 1005; Same v. Gaddie, Id.

IX. ACTIONS.

§ 94. "Office of next friend" defined.—Upton's Committee v. Bush (Ky.) 1005; Same v. Gaddie, Id.

§ 94. A suit to recover property of an incompetent may be properly brought by his next friend where he has no committee, and the commonwealth representative does not act.—Upton's Committee v. Bush (Ky.) 1005; Same v. Gaddie, Id.

§ 94. Failure of the next friend of an incompetent having no committee to file an affidavit of qualification before suit is brought was waived if not objected to in due season.—Upton's Committee v. Bush (Ky.) 1005; Same v. Gaddie, Id.

§ 94. Where, in a suit by an incompetent's committee, it appeared that his appointment was invalid, and he thereupon offered to prosecute the suit as next friend, the court should have permitted him to do so instead of dismissing the suit.—Upton's Committee v. Bush (Ky.) 1005; Same v. Gaddie, Id.

I. CONTROL AND REGULATION IN GENERAL.

§ 20. Act March 1, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 315), prohibiting the licensing of insurance companies to do business in the state where the pay or salary of any one employé is more than $50,000, held applicable to any insurance company doing business in the state, as well as those who might enter thereafter.—State ex rel. Equitable Life Assur. Society of United States v. Vandiver (Mo.) 45; State ex rel. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Same (Mo.) 63; State ex rel. Prudential Life Ins. Co. of America v. Same, Id.

§ 20. Act March 1, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 315), does not attempt to fix the salaries of officers of insurance companies, but merely prohibits the granting of a new license to companies paying more than $50,000 to any one person.—State ex rel. Equitable Life Assur. Society of United States v. Vandiver (Mo.) 45; State ex rel. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Same (Mo.) 63; State ex rel. Prudential Life Ins. Co. of America v. Same, Id.

§ 20. A license, authorizing an insurance company to do business within the state, is not a contract, but merely a grant of authority for one year.—State ex rel. Equitable Life Assur. Society of United States v. Vandiver (Mo.) 45; State ex rel. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Same (Mo.) 63; State ex rel. Prudential Life Ins. Co. of America v. Same, Id.

§ 20. Insurance commissioner's refusal to renew an insurance company's license does not affect any former transaction, but merely prevents the transaction of new business.—State ex rel. Equitable Life Assur. Society of United States v. Vandiver (Mo.) 45; State ex rel. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Same (Mo.) 63; State ex rel. Prudential Life Ins. Co. of America v. Same, Id.

§ 20. That a foreign insurance company had invested large sums of money in Missouri held not to prevent the insurance commissioner from refusing to renew its license under Act March 1, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 315), on the theory of an implied contract between the corporation and state.—State ex rel. Equitable Life Assur. Society of United States v. Vandiver (Mo.) 45; State ex rel. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Same (Mo.) 63; State ex rel. Prudential Life Ins. Co. of America v. Same, Id.

§ 20. Act March 1, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 315), prohibiting the issuance of a renewal license to insurance companies paying more than $50,000 a year to any employé, held a valid police regulation, and not an attempt to regulate internal affairs of such associations.—State ex rel. Equitable Life Assur. Society of United States v. Vandiver (Mo.) 45; State ex rel. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Same (Mo.) 63; State ex rel. Prudential Life Ins. Co. of America v. Same, Id.

II. INSURANCE COMPANIES.

(A) Stock Companies.

Subject and title of statute relating to salaries of officers, see Statutes, § 113.

(B) Mutual Companies.

§ 69. The district court of Travis county had jurisdiction to forfeit for cause the charter of a mutual fire insurance company whose domicile was at Houston and appoint a receiver for the company.—Graham v. Sparks (Tex. Civ. App.) 597.

§ 70. Even if funds of a mutual fire insurance company deposited with the State Treasurer under Acts 1903, p. 168, c. 109, § 5, were not in custody of the law upon forfeiture of its charter and the appointment of a receiver, under section 9, such funds were held for the benefit of the policy holders in proportion to their insurance, and could not be garnished.—Graham v. Sparks (Tex. Civ. App.) 597.

V. THE CONTRACT IN GENERAL.

(B) Construction and Operation.

§ 146. Insurance contracts must be liberally construed in favor of the insured.—Roseberry v. American Benevolent Ass'n (Mo. App.) 785.

§ 146. In order to work a forfeiture under an insurance contract, it must clearly appear that the matter was within the contemplation of the parties at the time the contract was entered into; and, if the question be doubtful, the doubt must be resolved in favor of insured.—Roseberry v. American Benevolent Ass'n (Mo. App.) 785.

§ 146. The conditions of an insurance policy providing for the forfeiture of all or a portion of the indemnity, if insured engage in an occupation or act other than that mentioned in the policy, are strictly construed against the insurer.—Roseberry v. American Benevolent Ass'n (Mo. App.) 785.

VIII. CANCELLATION, SURRENDER, ABANDONMENT, OR RESCISSION OF POLICY.

Acceptance of less than cash value by insured as accord and satisfaction, see Accord and Satisfaction, § 1.
Validity of compromise of surrender value, see Compromise and Settlement, § 8.

X. FORFEITURE OF POLICY FOR BREACH OF PROMISSORY WARRANTY, COVENANT, OR CONDITION SUBSEQUENT.

(B) Matters Relating to Property or Interest Insured.

§ 335. An iron-safe clause in a fire insurance policy is valid.—Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. Kaufman (Ark.) 289.

§ 335. An insurer held to have written a policy containing an iron-safe clause with reference to the custom of the community as to the usual hours of business.—Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. Kaufman (Ark.) 289.

§ 335. In an action on a fire policy, an instruction as to plaintiff's breach of a condition requiring the keeping of an inventory in a fireproof safe held proper.—Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. Kaufman (Ark.) 289.

Digitized by Google

§ 336. Fire policies issued without the request of insured and by mistake held in effect no insurance, and their mere formal existence not to avoid a policy under the additional insurance clause.—North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Robertson (Ky.) 630.

§ 336. Strict compliance with a clause in a fire insurance policy, forbidding other concurrent insurance unless permitted, is essential to a recovery.—Gross v. Colonial Assur. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 517.

§ 336. Rev. St. 1895, art. 3096aa, added by Acts 28th Leg. 1903, p. 94, c. 69, held not to abolish the doctrine of promissory warranties so that carrying other policies in excess of concurrent insurance permitted avoided the policy.—Gross v. Colonial Assur. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 517.

(E) Nonpayment of Premiums or Assessments.

§ 367. Nonpayment of a premium note held no bar to insured's right to extended insurance.—New York Life Ins. Co. v. Van Meter's Adm'r (Ky.) 438.

§ 367. The term "indebtedness," as used in a nonforfeiture provision in a life insurance policy, held not to include premium notes.—New York Life Ins. Co. v. Van Meter's Adm'r (Ky.) 438.

§ 367. On insured's failure to pay subsequent premiums, he acquired a vested right to extended insurance for a term specified in tables attached to the policy.—New York Life Ins. Co. v. Van Meter's Adm'r (Ky.) 438.

XI. ESTOPPEL, WAIVER, OR AGREEMENTS AFFECTING RIGHT TO AVOID OR FORFEIT POLICY.

§ 390. A forfeiture under the additional insurance clause may be waived either by parol agreement or conduct of the insurer.—North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Robertson (Ky.) 630.

XIII. EXTENT OF LOSS AND LIABILITY OF INSURER.

(B) Insurance of Property and Titles.

§ 504. An insurer sued on its fire policy, held under its answer and the evidence liable for only a part of the loss, according to the policy, without making another insurer a party.—Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Delta County Farmers' Ass'n (Tex. Civ. App.) 599.

§ 504. Fire policies held to constitute double insurance, limiting the liability of one insurer according to the terms of its policy.—Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Delta County Farmers' Ass'n (Tex. Civ. App.) 599.

§ 504. A stipulation in a fire policy held not to nullify a provision therein limiting insurer's liability to the same the loss sustained as the amount insured bore to the whole insurance.—Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Delta County Farmers' Ass'n (Tex. Civ. App.) 599.

(E) Accident and Health Insurance.

§ 531. That defendant insurance company had classified in its manual the laborers engaged about an oilcloth and linoleum factory, and also laborers about oil wells under an extra hazard, held not to show a like classification of labor in handling gasoline.—Roseberry v. American Benevolent Ass'n (Mo. App.) 785.

XIV. NOTICE AND PROOF OF LOSS.

§ 539. Under an accident policy requiring notice of injury within 10 days, insured held excused from complying with such provision, where by the injuries and medical treatment therefor, he was rendered unconscious for three weeks.—Roseberry v. American Benevolent Ass'n (Mo. App.) 785.

XV. ADJUSTMENT OF LOSS.

Acceptance of less than cash value by insured as accord and satisfaction, see Accord and Satisfaction, § 1.

Validity of compromise of rights, see Compromise and Settlement, § 8.

XVIII. ACTIONS ON POLICIES.

§ 646. If under an accident policy a certain occupation was classed in the manual of defendant association as hazardous, rendering a higher rate of premium necessary, or affording a lesser amount of indemnity with the same premium than that pertaining to the ordinary occupation of insured, it was a matter within the knowledge of defendant, and the burden rested on it, in an action on the policy, to establish the same.—Roseberry v. American Benevolent Ass'n (Mo. App.) 785.

§ 668. In an action on a fire policy, whether insured's acts constituted a sufficient compliance with an iron-safe clause in a fire policy, held for the jury.—Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. Kaufman (Ark.) 289.

§ 668. Whether fire policies constituting additional insurance in violation of that clause were issued without the request of insured and by mistake held for the jury.—North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Robertson (Ky.) 630.

§ 669. In an action on a fire policy, a charge that the jury should consider the custom of closing hours and bookkeeping in the community in determining whether plaintiff had substantially complied with an iron-safe clause in the policy held proper.—Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. Kaufman (Ark.) 289.

XX. MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE.

(D) Forfeiture or Suspension.

§ 748. Insured held not "convicted" of a felony within a certificate of life insurance, conditioned to be void on his being so convicted, where, after verdict, judgment, and sentence, he appealed, with suspension of sentence and judgment under Rev. St. 1899, § 2698 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1590), and pending appeal he died.—Baker v. Modern Woodmen of America (Mo. App.) 794.

III. LOCAL OPTION.

§ 31. A void local option election is not to be considered in determining whether an election has been held in the territorial subdivision within the legal period.—State ex rel. Holladay v. Rinke (Mo. App.) 159.

§ 32. Cities, in order to be excluded from general local option election in a county, under Rev. St. 1899, § 3027 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1733), held only required to have 2,500 inhabitants, and not 2,500 qualified voters.—State ex rel. Holladay v. Rinke (Mo. App.) 159.

§ 33. A county court's order for local option election, finding that there was no incorporated city or town in the county containing 2,500 inhabitants or more, held not subject to collateral attack.—State ex rel. Holladay v. Rinke (Mo. App.) 159.

§ 33. A notice published for the holding of a local option election held a departure from the order for the election, which was therefore void.—State ex rel. Holladay v. Rinke (Mo. App.) 159.

IV. LICENSES AND TAXES.

Priority between judgment and lien of person furnishing money for payment of license, see Judgment, § 785.

§ 72. The action of the council of the city of Texarkana on applications for liquor licenses as authorized by the charter (Sp. Laws 1907, p. 823, c. 104), held not reviewable by the courts.—Berger v. De Loach (Tex. Civ. App.) 591.

§ 72. The Legislature may confer on the council of a city the power to conclusively determine what persons shall obtain a liquor license.—Berger v. De Loach (Tex. Civ. App.) 591.

§ 74. Certain facts held not to prove that the council of Texarkana abused its discretion in acting on applications for a liquor license, as authorized by the charter (Sp. Laws 1907, p. 823, c. 104).—Berger v. De Loach (Tex. Civ. App.) 591.

§ 74. A party seeking relief by mandamus for an abuse by a city council of discretion conferred on it in ruling on applications for a liquor license has the burden of showing such abuse.—Berger v. De Loach (Tex. Civ. App.) 591.

§ 106. Under Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4204, 4208 (Russell's St. §§ 6146, 6150), a violation of a liquor license issued to a firm by one of the members thereof held to authorize the revocation of the license as against the firm and its members.—Lewis & Potter v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 643.

§ 108. An agreement relating to obtaining a liquor license held contrary to law, so that the state may, at its election, cancel the license.—Leon Mercantile Co. v. Anderson (Tex. Civ. App.) 868.

V. REGULATIONS.

I. NATURE AND ESSENTIALS IN GENERAL.

§ 17. The omission of the citation to give the date of filing the petition renders a default judgment erroneous.—Le Master v. Dalhart Real Estate Agency (Tex. Civ. App.) 185.

VI. ON TRIAL OF ISSUES.

(A) Rendition, Form, and Requisites in General.

§ 193. Held, that an equity court cannot, any more than a law court, hold a case open after judgment for further adjudication on the merits.—Ball v. Peper Cotton Press Co. (Mo. App.) 798.

§ 203. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 694 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 703), there can be only one final judgment, though the petition contains several counts, and though separate trials are had thereon.—Mann v. Doerr (Mo.) 86.

§ 218. Where a judgment was set aside because founded on improper proof, a subsequent judgment, based on competent proof, directing that the first decree be executed as the then judgment of the court, was not void.—Oldham v. McElroy (Ky.) 414.

(C) Conformity to Process, Pleadings, Proofs, and Verdict or Findings.

§ 256. Where defendant denies all liability, and the amount claimed is not disputed, if any liability attached, a verdict for plaintiff was sufficient to support a judgment for the amount sued for.—Dine v. Donnelly (Ky.) 685.

VIII. AMENDMENT, CORRECTION, AND REVIEW IN SAME COURT.

§ 299. If a motion to modify is filed at the term when the judgment was entered, and is carried over to the next term without a ruling, it may be disposed of at the subsequent term.—Breeding v. Nelson (Mo. App.) 1080.

X. EQUITABLE RELIEF.

(A) Nature of Remedy and Grounds.

§ 403. An independent suit based upon equitable grounds may be maintained to prevent the enforcement of an unjust judgment irrespective of statute.—Wolf v. Sahm (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

§ 415. In a direct attack on a default judgment by suit to set it aside, whether the judgment is absolutely void need not be determined, but only where the facts are available in a direct proceeding, as an appeal, etc.—Le Master v. Dalhart Real Estate Agency (Tex. Civ. App.) 185.

§ 425. An amended petition held not to be ground for setting aside a default judgment.—Le Master v. Dalhart Real Estate Agency (Tex. Civ. App.) 185.

§ 426. Failure of a decree directing the sale of a pledged note to order a newspaper publication as required by St. § 14a (Russell's St. § 24), held only ground for avoidance of the decree on exceptions or to set it aside, as provided by Civ. Code Prac. § 518, subsecs. 4, 7.—Bank of Cerulean Springs v. Gardner (Ky.) 608.

§ 446. Where defendant's newly discovered evidence was not ground for a new trial because not applicable to any issue tried, its remedy was by suit to set aside the judgment.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Smith (Ark.) 282.

(B) Jurisdiction and Proceedings.

§ 456. An equitable suit to prevent the enforcement of an unjust judgment is not barred until after four years.—Wolf v. Sahm (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

§ 460. A petition to set aside a judgment directing the sale of collaterals held insufficient to justify vacation of the decree for fraud, unavoidable casualty, or misfortune.—Bank of Cerulean Springs v. Gardner (Ky.) 608.

§ 460. In a suit to set aside a default, held, that the petition was sufficient to entitle plaintiff to a submission on the merits of the issue, whether the facts sufficiently excused his failure to prosecute with the usual legal remedy by appeal or error.—Le Master v. Dalhart Real Estate Agency (Tex. Civ. App.) 185.

XI. COLLATERAL ATTACK.

(A) Judgments Impeachable Collaterally.

§ 470. A valid judgment is binding upon the parties thereto until set aside by a direct proceeding for that purpose.—Kruegel v. Rawlins (Tex. Civ. App.) 216.

(B) Grounds.

§ 497. A recital in a judgment that an estate which was the only defendant sued, though duly cited, did not appear, is meaningless, and affords no presumption in favor of service.—Perry v. Whiting (Tex. Civ. App.) 903.

(C) Proceedings.

§ 518. An appeal from a judgment is not a collateral, but in the nature of a direct, attack.—Reineman v. Larkin (Mo.) 307.

§ 518. A suit to set aside a default judgment held a direct, and not a collateral, attack thereon.—Le Master v. Dalhart Real Estate Agency (Tex. Civ. App.) 185.

(B) Causes of Action and Defenses Merged, Barred, or Concluded.

Former determination affecting right to maintain habeas corpus proceedings, see Habeas Corpus, § 117.

XIV. CONCLUSIVENESS OF ADJUDICATION.

(B) Persons Concluded.

§ 682. Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 5275, a judgment against defendant, in trespass to try title, held not conclusive on his prior grantee.—Elliott v. Morris (Tex. Civ. App.) 209.

§ 707. An absent heir, who was presumed to be dead, and whose interest was not considered in a suit for partition of property, was not bound by the decree.—Grimes v. Miller (Mo.) 21.

(C) Matters Concluded.

§ 720. A judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction on a matter in issue is binding on the parties and their privies in another action between them.—Morgan v. Kendrick (Ark.) 278.

§ 720. In a suit involving the title to and possession of certain land, including the determination of a boundary, the judgment therein held res judicata as to the question of boundary.—Vincent v. Blanton (Ky.) 466.

§ 725. A former judgment is only conclusive of such matters as were essential to be determined.—Manning v. Green (Tex. Civ. App.) 721.

§ 725. Judgments for title and possession of land only held not conclusive as to the rights of defendants as holders of a purchase-money note reserving a lien on the land.—Manning v. Green (Tex. Civ. App.) 721.

XV. LIEN.

§ 785. A judgment creditor held not a lienholder for value, without notice of a third person's ownership of property.—Leon Mercantile Co. v. Anderson (Tex. Civ. App.) 868.

XXII. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE OF JUDGMENT AS ESTOPPEL OR DEFENSE.

§ 951. Rev. St. 1895, Art. 4649, relating to the record of judgments, held inapplicable to the question whether an unrecorded judgment was available to identify certain land in controversy.—Kimbell v. Powell (Tex. Civ. App.) 541.

§ 58. Acts 30th Leg. 1907, p. 269, c. 139, known as the "jury wheel law," is valid.—Oates v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 370.

§ 58. Jury wheel law (Laws 1907, p. 269, c. 139) held constitutional.—Rasor v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 512.

§ 72. Efforts of a sheriff to summon absent jurors held insufficient to justify the court in directing the sheriff to summon talesmen.—Rasor v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 512.

§ 72. Action of court in completing a panel held not error.—Railey v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 1120.

V. COMPETENCY OF JURORS, CHALLENGES, AND OBJECTIONS.

§ 97. In a prosecution for violating the local option law, held not error to refuse to set aside the jury because many of the jurors were members of a local option league, and some had voted for local option.—Deadweyler v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 863.

§ 103. A juror held qualified, notwithstanding an opinion formed from reading the newspapers.—Groszoehmigen v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 1113.

§ 110. Any error in excusing jurors from the panel and summoning talesmen held not available; defendant not having peremptorily challenged the talesmen, or exhausted his peremptory challenges.—York v. State (Ark.) 1070.

§ 110. Any error in not excusing a juror for cause held waived, where defendant did not exhaust his peremptory challenges.—Holt v. State (Ark.) 1072.

§ 110. Where, after the court had selected a jury, over defendant's objections, partially composed of disinterested bystanders, another jury regularly drawn from the box became available for the trial, but defendant declined the court's offer to substitute it for the other jury, he cannot object to the trial before the jury partially drawn from the bystanders.—Weil v. Kreutzer (Ky.) 471.

§ 116. Fact that one of the regular panel of jurors, on examination as to his qualifications, stated that he had read about the case, and thought at the time he read about it that plaintiff ought to have damages, but that the matter had passed from his mind, and he had thought no more about it, was no ground for dismissal of the entire panel upon excusing the juror.—Gordon v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. (Mo.) 80.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

III. CIVIL JURISDICTION AND AUTHORITY.

§ 48. Justices of the peace are of inferior and limited jurisdiction, and, when dealing with matters of attachment, do not proceed in accordance with the course of the common law, but by virtue of the statute.—Sawyer v. Burris (Mo. App.) 321.

§ 48. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 3840 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2130), relating to attachment actions before justices of the peace, the situs of the property, when relied on to confer jurisdiction, must affirmatively appear on the face of the record.—Sawyer v. Burris (Mo. App.) 321.

IV. PROCEDURE IN CIVIL CASES.

§ 79. The nature of the citation in a justice's court stated, and the county court held not entitled to look to the justice's citation to determine what was plaintiff's cause of action.—Wooley v. Corley (Tex. Civ. App.) 1139.

V. REVIEW OF PROCEEDINGS.

(A) Appeal and Error.

In replevin suit, see Replevin, § 116.

§ 146. The county court held not to get jurisdiction on appeal from a justice's court, which entered no final judgment.—Brown v. McClendon (Tex. Civ. App.) 903.

§ 166. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 672 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 686) a judgment dismissing defendant's appeal from a justice's judgment held to be treated as set aside, though the record only inferentially showed that this was done; defendant having thereafter participated in the trial on the merits in the appellate court.—Breeding v. Nelson (Mo. App.) 1080.

§ 166. An order considered according to its substance held to be in effect an order sustaining a motion to set aside a judgment dismissing an appeal.—Breeding v. Nelson (Mo. App.) 1080.

§ 174. An amended petition filed in the county court, in an action in trover, begun in justice's court, held not to set up a cause of action different from that shown by the citation issued in the justice's court.—Wooley v. Corley (Tex. Civ. App.) 1139.

§ 174. Plaintiff, in an action in justice's court, could amend his petition on appeal to the county court so as to conform it to the details of the evidence developed at trial, without violating the rule against pleading a new cause of action by amendment.—Wooley v. Corley (Tex. Civ. App.) 1139.

§ 189. An order considered according to its substance held to be in effect an order sustaining a motion to set aside a judgment dismissing an appeal, and for affirmance of the original judgment.—Breeding v. Nelson (Mo. App.) 1080.

§ 50. A lease of land in possession of the alleged tenant and the execution of a note for the rent held void, where the tenant was then the owner of the land by adverse possession.—Johnson & Burr v. Elder (Ark.) 1066.

(B) Estoppel of Tenant.

Notoriety of attornment as affecting adverse possession, see Adverse Possession, § 30.

IV. TERMS FOR YEARS.

(B) Assignment, Subletting, and Mortgage.

§ 80. A subtenant is not liable on the contract between the landlord and the original lessee.—Ft. Worth Fair Ass'n v. Ft. Worth Driving Club (Tex. Civ. App.) 213.

VII. PREMISES AND ENJOYMENT AND USE THEREOF.

(B) Possession, Enjoyment, and Use.

§ 127. A written lease of patented land, title to which was created by the patent, and which had devolved on lessor either by conveyance or by operation of the statute of limitations prior to another's entry thereon, invests lessee with the actual possession at time of such entry.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 134. A lessee held not entitled to restrain the sublessee from selling intoxicants on the premises.—Ft. Worth Fair Ass'n v. Ft. Worth Driving Club (Tex. Civ. App.) 213.

VIII. RENT AND ADVANCES.

(A) Rights and Liabilities.

Pleading subrogation to right to rent as a conclusion, see Pleading, § 8.

(C) Lien.

§ 254. Landlord's lien under Ky. St. § 2317 (Russell's St. § 4574), held not lost by delay in bringing action.—Jones v. Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co. (Ky.) 633.

§ 3. To constitute larceny, the taking must be done with a felonious intent.—Douglass v. State (Ark.) 923.

II. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

(A) Indictment and Information.

§ 40. Evidence, in a prosecution for theft under Pen. Code 1895, art. 874, held insufficient to sustain a conviction.—Carson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 860.

(B) Evidence.

§ 55. Evidence held to sustain a conviction of horse theft.—Douglass v. State (Ark.) 923.

Digitized by Google

§ 61. On a trial for horse theft, the evidence held to justify a finding that the horse was stolen in the county in which the indictment was found.—Douglass v. State (Ark.) 923.

§ 64. Possession of property recently stolen, held to raise a presumption of guilt and a link in the evidence.—Douglass v. State (Ark.) 923.

§ 64. That accused in possession of stolen property makes a distinct assertion of title and ownership thereto, held evidence that he intended to convert the same, though his explanation, if honestly made, prevents his being guilty of larceny.—Douglass v State (Ark.) 923.

(C) Trial and Review.

Application of instructions to case, see Criminal Law, § 814.

§ 68. If there is any conflict whatever in the testimony as to the value of property stolen on which the character of the larceny of which accused may be convicted depends, the question should be submitted to the jury by appropriate instructions.—State v. Nicholas (Mo.) 12.

§ 79. In view of Rev St. 1899 § 1900, 1901 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 1300 1301), held, that it was the duty of the court, in a prosecution for burglary and larceny from a dwelling house, wherein there was testimony both ways as to the value of the property stolen as being more or less than $30, to designate the punishment of larceny taking into consideration the value of the property and that it failed in this respect, and the failure was manifestly erroneous.—State v. Nicholas (Mo.) 12.

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

Restraining publication, see Injunction, § 98.

I. WORDS AND ACTS ACTIONABLE, AND LIABILITY THEREFOR.

§ 10. A newspaper article referring to a member of the General Assembly and his support of a candidate for United States Senator held not to charge the member with bribery and not libelous.—Branch v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co. (Mo.) 93.

§ 10. It is not libelous to point out a seeming inconsistency in a public officer, and his acts are fairly open to criticism and comment.—Branch v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co. (Mo.) 93.

II. PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS, AND MALICE THEREIN.

§ 45. Qualified privilege in the law of libel defined.—Holmes v. Royal Fraternal Union (Mo.) 100.

§ 45. In determining whether a communication is privileged, the court held required to consider the exigencies of the situation of the person making the communication.—Holmes v. Royal Fraternal Union (Mo.) 100.

§ 45. Communications otherwise actionable held privileged when made by a voluntary society concerning the conduct or character of an officer or member.—Holmes v Royal Fraternal Union (Mo.) 100.

§ 45. A communication made by a fraternal beneficiary association to members concerning the conduct of an agent held a qualified privileged one.—Holmes v. Royal Fraternal Union (Mo.) 100.

§ 48. It is not libelous to point out a seeming inconsistency in a public officer, and his acts are fairly open to criticism and comment.—Branch v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co. (Mo) 93.

§ 51. One suing for libel based on a privileged communication held required to prove express malice.—Holmes v. Royal Fraternal Union (Mo.) 100.

IV. ACTIONS.

(A) Right of Action and Defenses.

Liability of corporation, see Corporations, § 432.
Liability of master for slander by servant, see Master and Servant, § 306.
Liability of partnership for slander by servant, see Partnership, § 169.

§ 75. An action for libel based on an article in a newspaper published by a corporation in one county and circulated in another county may be brought in the latter county.—Branch v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co. (Mo.) 93.

(B) Parties, Preliminary Proceedings, and Pleading.

§ 77. Slander, which is an oral utterance of defamatory matter, can only be committed by an individual, and two or more persons cannot jointly utter the same words, but each speaks for himself, and is liable for his own language.—Duquesne Distributing Co. v. Greenbaum (Ky.) 1026.

(C) Evidence.

§ 101. A defendant in libel has the burden of proving the privileged character of the communication complained of.—Holmes v. Royal Fraternal Union (Mo.) 100.

§ 101. Where the court determines that the communication complained of as libelous is a privileged one, the burden of proof shifts to plaintiff to show express malice, and where there is no substantial evidence of such malice the court must sustain a demurrer to the evidence.—Holmes v. Royal Fraternal Union (Mo.) 100.

§ 105. Where an article alleged to be libelous was not ambiguous, and, according to its natural significance attending its publication, did not charge a libel, witnesses held incompetent to testify as to their understanding of the article.—Branch v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co. (Mo.) 93.

Digitized by Google

§ 105. In determining whether an article reflecting on the conduct of a public officer is libelous, it is proper to consider the circumstances surrounding the officer and the publisher of the article at the time of the publication.—Branch v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co. (Mo.) 93.

§ 112. In an action for libel based on a qualified privileged communication, evidence held not to show the existence of express malice.—Holmes v. Royal Fraternal Union (Mo.) 100.

§ 112. In an action for libel based on a qualified privileged communication, evidence held to show that the statements in the communication were substantially true.—Holmes v. Royal Fraternal Union (Mo.) 100.

(E) Trial, Judgment, and Review.

§ 123. Where the words in a publication charged to be libelous are ambiguous, or where, under the circumstances, they are susceptible of a double meaning, the question in what sense they were used is for the jury.—Branch v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co. (Mo.) 93.

§ 123. Notwithstanding the constitutional provision as to actions for libel, the court must determine matters of law in an action for libel, and must exclude incompetent evidence.—Branch v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co. (Mo.) 93.

§ 123. Where, in an action for libel, the court determined that the article did not charge bribery, it was error to permit witnesses to testify that they understood the article to charge bribery.—Branch v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co. (Mo.) 93.

§ 123. Where a libelous communication is alleged to be privileged, the court must determine the question of privilege in the first instance.—Holmes v. Royal Fraternal Union (Mo.) 100.

(Carroll (Ark.) 947.

§ 102. Under Ky. St. § 2543 (Russell's St. § 209), the statute of limitations held not to apply in behalf of the trustee under an express enforceable parol trust respecting land.—Smith v. Smith (Ky.) 1002.

(H) Commencement of Action or Other Proceeding.

§ 127. In an action for personal injuries, held, that the statute of limitations had not run.—Ft. Worth & R. G. Ry. Co. v. Robertson (Tex. Civ. App.) 202.

III. ACKNOWLEDGMENT, NEW PROMISE, AND PART PAYMENT.

§ 151. In view of Rev. St. 1895, art. 1869, an action on a note by a legatee thereof held not barred by limitations.—Melton v. Beasley (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

IV. OPERATION AND EFFECT OF BAR BY LIMITATION.

§ 167. Under Kirby's Dig. § 5399, relating to foreclosure of mortgages after period of limitation on the debt, held, that when the debt secured is apparently barred, and there is no indorsement on the margin of the record, the mortgage as to third parties becomes in effect an unrecorded mortgage.—Morgan v. Kendrick (Ark.) 278.

§ 167. Where the debt secured by mortgage is apparently barred by limitations, rendering the mortgage the same as though unrecorded as to third persons, a lien cannot be defeated by placing the title to the property in a third person for the mortgagor's benefit, nor by giving the property away.—Morgan v. Kendrick (Ark.) 278.

V. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW.

§ 182. Acts 1905, p. 35, c. 29, held a statute of limitations, and not available as a defense unless specially pleaded under the express provisions of Rev. St. 1895, art. 3371.—Tillman v. Erp (Tex. Civ. App.) 547.

II. WANT OF PROBABLE CAUSE.

§ 16. To render a person liable for malicious prosecution, he must have acted maliciously and without probable cause.—Roberts v. Thomas (Ky.) 961.

§ 21. Advice of counsel is not a defense to an action for malicious prosecution unless the facts are fully and fairly laid before the counsel, and such advice will constitute probable cause only when reasonable diligence is used to learn the facts on which the advice of counsel is sought.—Gatz v. Harris (Ky.) 462.

§ 21. The advice of counsel, when properly obtained, is a defense to an action for malicious prosecution, however erroneous the advice may be.—Gatz v. Harris (Ky.) 462.

V. ACTIONS.

§ 71. In an action for malicious prosecution, where the defense was advice of counsel, whether defendant had, before obtaining plaintiff's prosecution for disorderly conduct, laid the facts fully and fairly before his counsel, held, under the evidence, to be for the jury.—Gatz v. Harris (Ky.) 462.

§ 135. The violation of a uniform safety custom in the operation of trains in defendant's railroad yard held to raise a cause of action to the same extent as if it had been a printed and published rule.—Lewis v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1090.

§ 137. Statement of care required of engineer of train on discovering peril of section hand on track.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Lang's Adm'x (Ky.) 993.

§ 149. Where a servant when injured was in his proper place, it was not material whether he had been specially ordered by his foreman to occupy his position or not.—Mason, Hanger & Coleman Co. v. Henry (Ky.) 1001.

(D) Warning and Instructing Servant.

§ 150. A colliery company's failure to give miners notice of when a blast would be set off in a main entry held negligence.—Phenix Jellico Coal Co. v. Lemp (Ky.) 418.

(E) Fellow Servants.

§ 181. Under the statutes in force in February, 1907, a railroad conductor in charge of a gravel train and a car inspector were not fellow servants.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Lewis (Ark.) 268.

§ 198. The fireman and a brakeman of a train held fellow servants.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearcy (Ky.) 1037.

§ 198. Men employed to load cars held not fellow servants.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Romans (Tex.) 1104.

§ 202. A railroad company held liable for injury to its brakeman, not causing death, only if the negligence of its engineer, causing it, was gross.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearcy (Ky.) 1037.

(F) Risks Assumed by Servant.

§ 205. A laborer removing from a railroad tunnel rock blown down by blasting held not required to exercise any diligence to discover hidden dangers.—Mason, Hanger & Coleman Co. v. Kennison (Ky.) 999.

§ 205. A servant is not bound to look for hidden danger in the place given him by his master in which to work.—Mason, Hanger & Coleman Co. v. Henry (Ky.) 1001.

§ 205. Application of rule as to furnishing a safe place for a servant to work stated.—Keller & Brady Co. v. Berry (Ky.) 1009.

§ 208. One undertaking to drive a mule in a mine held to assume the dangers ordinarily incident to the occupation.—Green River Coal & Coke Co. v. Phaup (Ky.) 651.

§ 209. A servant having accepted employment to work with a band saw held to have assumed the ordinary dangers connected therewith.—Coin v. John H. Talge Lounge Co. (Mo.) 1.

§ 210. Statement as to assumption of risk by section hand in attempting to remove velocipede from track in face of approaching train.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Lang's Adm'x (Ky.) 993.

§ 210. An employé whose duty it was to fill engine tenders with fuel oil, and who, in descending from a tender in the usual way after filling it, stepped on the top of a slanting fuel box which was covered with grease, and slipped and fell, held not to have assumed the risk of injury.—Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Alexander (Tex. Civ. App.) 602.

§ 213. A railway employé does not assume the risk of the negligence of the railway company in the operation of a train.—Trinity & B. V. Ry. Co. v. Elgin (Tex. Civ. App.) 577.

§ 216. An infant servant, killed by the premature explosion of dynamite caused by the negligence of his father acting as foreman, held not to have assumed the risk.—Walton & Co. v. Burchel (Tenn.) 391.

§ 217. A mule driver in a mine held to have assumed the danger incident to the defective condition of the car in which he was riding.—Green River Coal & Coke Co. v. Phaup (Ky.) 651.

§ 217. Where a servant discovers or might discover that the machinery is unsafe, and continues in the employment, he cannot recover for injuries resulting.—Coin v. John H. Talge Lounge Co. (Mo.) 1.

§ 217. In an action by a servant for personal injuries, the neglect of the master to furnish a reasonably safe place to work, though with the servant's knowledge, does not make the danger arising therefrom a risk assumed by the servant.—Wilson v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis (Mo. App.) 1083.

§ 217. A servant held to have assumed a certain risk of his employment.—Maxwell Ginning Co. v. Wallan (Tex. Civ. App.) 182.

§ 217. While a railroad fireman assumed the ordinary risks of his employment and all extraordinary risks of which he knew or should have known, he did not assume risks of which he had no knowledge due to the company's failure to exercise reasonable care.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Holt (Tex. Civ. App.) 581.

§ 217. A servant injured while using a defective ladder, of which defect he had no knowledge, held not to have assumed the risk.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Adams (Tex. Civ. App.) 876.

§ 217. Where a servant was injured by the breaking of a defective ladder, an instruction that he did not assume the risk, unless he knew of the defect at the very time he was injured, held proper.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Adams (Tex. Civ. App.) 876.

§ 219. A servant may not work in a place where the danger is so obvious that an ordinarily prudent man would not take the risk.—Mason, Hanger & Coleman Co. v. Henry (Ky.) 1001.

§ 219. A servant does not assume the risk of danger from unsafe machinery unless the defects are obvious.—Coin v. John H. Talge Lounge Co. (Mo.) 1.

§ 221. The rule as to a master's liability on his agreement to repair defects in machinery held not to apply where he promises to equip a band saw with guards.—Coin v. John H. Talge Lounge Co. (Mo.) 1.

§ 221. A promise of a master's superintendent to furnish a guard for machinery which was not defective was without consideration, and the promise must have been the inducing motive which kept the servant at work, and without which he would have quit.—Coin v. John H. Talge Lounge Co. (Mo.) 1.

(G) Contributory Negligence of Servant.

§ 233. Where an employé, who was engaged at night in filling a tender with fuel oil, in passing from the tender in the usual way stepped on the top of a slanting fuel box which was covered with grease, and slipped and fell, he was not guilty of contributory negligence.—Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Alexander (Tex. Civ. App.) 602.

§ 233. A servant injured while attempting to use a defective ladder in accordance with directions of his superior, held not negligent.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Adams (Tex. Civ. App.) 876.

§ 235. A servant, without knowledge of notices requiring inspection of tools, held not required to make such inspection.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Adams (Tex Civ. App.) 876.

§ 236. A railroad company held liable for injury to its section hand while riding a velocipede on the track by being struck by a train only in case of negligence after his peril was discovered.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Lang's Adm'x (Ky.) 993.

§ 236. A servant whose duty required him to board a locomotive under an archway held entitled to presume that it would remain stationary until he was warned by bell or whistle.—Lewis v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1090.

§ 240. A railroad switchman held not negligent because attempting to uncouple a car by drawing out the coupling pin from the platform, instead of uncoupling by using a lever at the side of the car.—Gordon v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. (Mo.) 80.

§ 246. The rule that acts done in an emergency on an impulse are not negligence as a matter of law applies to the protection of life as well as where the duty devolves on one to protect his employer's property.—Trinity & B. V. Ry. Co. v. Elgin (Tex. Civ. App.) 577.

§ 247. Any negligence of a brakeman in taking a position on the railroad in front of an engine, held not to preclude recovery for accident which would not have happened but for his foot getting caught between the ties.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Ford (Tex. Civ. App.) 709.

§ 248. A railroad company held liable for injury to a section hand on track using railroad velocipede, though he was negligent in going there, where after discovery of peril ordinary care was not used to avoid injuring him.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Lang's Adm'x (Ky.) 993.

§ 256. A petition for injuries to a servant held to sufficiently show the nature of plaintiff's employment.—Dawson v. King (Tex. Civ. App.) 917.

§ 257. A petition for injuries to a servant held sufficient as against a special exception held to state a cause of action for common-law negligence in the retention of an incompetent servant.—Lewis v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1090.

§ 258. A petition for injuries to a servant by being struck by a door while engaged in getting a hammer from an upper floor in a building held to state a cause of action as against a general demurrer.—Dawson v. King (Tex. Civ. App.) 917.

§ 258. A petition for injuries to a servant held sufficient as against a special exception that it should have alleged that the rolling door by which plaintiff was injured was defectively constructed.—Dawson v. King (Tex. Civ. App.) 917.

§ 259. A petition for injuries to a servant held sufficient as against a special exception that the petition should have stated that the employés by whose negligence the door was left insecure, by which plaintiff was injured, were not his fellow servants or servants subject to his control.—Dawson v. King (Tex. Civ. App.) 917.

§ 260. A petition for injuries to a servant held sufficient as against a special exception that, plaintiff having assumed by his own choice an unusual and dangerous method, he assumed the risk.—Dawson v. King (Tex. Civ. App.) 917.

§ 261. A petition for injuries to a servant held sufficient as against a special exception that the negligent act of plaintiff was the cause of his injury.—Dawson v. King (Tex. Civ. App.) 917.

§ 261. A petition for injuries to a servant held sufficient as against a special exception that plaintiff should have alleged that the use of the door by which he was injured was necessary to a proper prosecution of his work.—Dawson v. King (Tex. Civ. App.) 917.

§ 261. A petition for injuries to a servant held sufficient as against a special exception that plaintiff in placing his hand on the rolling door by which he was injured committed a voluntary and unnecessary act not in the discharge of his duty.—Dawson v. King (Tex. Civ. App.) 917.

§ 264. The evidence requisite in an action against a railroad company for causing the death of a switchman stated.—Newlin v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 125.

§ 264. Where a petition for injuries to a railroad servant stated a cause of action under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2873, 2874, 2875 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 1655–1657), it was not material that it also alleged negligence in keeping careless employés.—Lewis v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1090.

§ 265. Presumptions that the master has performed his duty to furnish safe and suitable appliances, and has no knowledge of defects, may be overcome by proof.—Woodson v. Prescott & N. W. R. Co. (Ark.) 273.

§ 265. A master's negligence in failing to provide reasonably safe appliances cannot be inferred by an accident to a servant.—Woodson v. Prescott & N. W. R. Co. (Ark.) 273.

§ 265. The burden of proof of a master's negligence, in an action for injuries to a servant, is on the servant.—Woodson v. Prescott & N. W. R. Co. (Ark.) 273.

§ 265. One suing for the death of a servant by the premature explosion of dynamite in charge of the foreman held to have the burden of proving that the explosion was caused by the negligence of the foreman.—Walton & Co. v. Burchel (Tenn.) 391.

§ 267. In an action for the death of a servant caused by the negligence of a foreman, the foreman's negligence may be proved by circumstances.—Walton & Co. v. Burchel (Tenn.) 391.

§ 270. In an action for injuries resulting from an alleged defective curved rail, plaintiff held entitled to introduce a rule of the railroad company requiring rails to be curved before laid.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Wiley (Ky.) 402.

§ 270. Why an engine was being backed with a car attached to make a coupling to another car is immaterial, and may not be shown, in an action for injury to the brakeman through the engine not being stopped on a signal therefor.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearcy (Ky.) 1037.

§ 270. That a railroad company had piled timber along its track, so that the view between its brakeman and engineer was obstructed, may be shown, in an action for injury to its brakeman through a stop signal for the engine not being obeyed, only as giving the reason why the brakeman communicated such signal to the engineer through the fireman, instead of to him directly.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearcy (Ky.) 1037.

§ 270. Nothing an intoxicated brakeman did or omitted to do having had anything to do with the injury to another brakeman, held such intoxication could not be shown, in an action against the railroad company for the injury.—Louisville & N. R. Co. Pearcy (Ky.) 1037.

§ 270. In an action for injuries to a servant, evidence held admissible in rebuttal to contradict the testimony of defendant's foreman.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Adams (Tex. Civ. App.) 876.

§ 274. In an action for the death of an employé engaged in putting fuel oil in an engine tender, by slipping on a greasy fuel box lid in descending from the tender, testimony that decedent was slow and awkward in filling the tender, and the engineer told him to hurry, was admissible on the question of contributory negligence.—Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Alexander (Tex. Civ. App.) 602.

§ 276. Where injuries to a servant may have been caused by either of two things for only one of which the master is responsible, held, that the servant could not recover.—Coin v. John H. Talge Lounge Co. (Mo.) 1.

§ 276. Evidence held to show that a storm, in progress at the time a railway fireman was injured in a collision, which obliterated the view of the track ahead, was a violent and unprecedented local storm which could not have been reasonably anticipated by the employés of the railroad company.—Evans v. Wabash R. Co., (Mo.) 36.

§ 276. Burden of proving negligence stated in an action for injuries to a servant.—Gordon v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. (Mo.) 80.

§ 278. That a railroad employé was injured by a defective car step held insufficient to justify a recovery without proof of the railroad company's negligence.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Lewis (Ark.) 268.

§ 278. Failure of a railroad company's car inspectors to discover a defective car step held evidence of the railroad company's negligence.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Lewis (Ark.) 268.

§ 278. Negligence of a master may be proved by evidence of a defect in the appliance causing the injury, discoverable by reasonable inspection.—Woodson v. Prescott & N. W. R. Co. (Ark.) 273.

§ 278. Burden of proving negligence stated in an action for injuries to a servant.—Gordon v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. (Mo.) 80.

§ 278. Evidence in an action against a railroad company for causing the death of a switchman held not to sustain the allegations as to negligence.—Newlin v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 125.

§ 278. In an action for a fireman's death by a collision, evidence held to sustain a finding of negligence.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Holt (Tex. Civ. App.) 581.

§ 278. In an action for a fireman's death by collision, evidence held to sustain a finding that the engineer was negligent.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Holt (Tex. Civ. App.) 581.

§ 279. In an action for the death of a locomotive fireman in a collision with another train, evidence held not to show that the engineer of decedent's engine negligently failed to keep a proper lookout ahead for signals.—Evans v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo.) 36.

§ 279. In an action for the death of a locomotive fireman in a collision with another train, evidence held not to show that those in charge of the other train, which had been compelled to stop because of fallen telegraph poles over the track negligently failed to give proper signals to the engineer of the colliding train to prevent the accident.—Evans v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo.) 36.

§ 279. In an action for the death of a servant by the premature explosion of dynamite in charge of the foreman, evidence held to establish facts justifying the inference that the explosion was caused by the negligence of the foreman.—Walton & Co. v. Burchel (Tenn.) 391.

§ 281. In an action for a fireman's death by a collision caused by his engine sideswiping box cars on a connecting switch, evidence held not to show that decedent saw the box cars before the collision.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Holt (Tex. Civ. App.) 581.

§ 284. Whether a railroad company maintaining a hospital department conducted the same as a mere charity or for profit held for the jury.—Zumwalt v. Texas Cent. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 1133.

§ 285. In an action against a railroad company for injuries to an employé while loading a car, evidence held to make the condition which really caused plaintiff's injury a question for the jury.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Romans (Tex.) 1104.

§ 286. In an action for injuries to a servant, plaintiff held entitled to go to the jury on the question of defendant's negligence and as to whether plaintiff and the negligent employé were fellow servants.—Crawford v. Sawyer & Austin Lumber Co. (Ark.) 286.

§ 286. Evidence as to negligence of the engineer of a train after discovery of peril of a section hand on the track held to prevent direction of a verdict for the company.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Lang's Adm'x (Ky.) 993.

§ 286. In an action for injuries to a servant, evidence held sufficient to go to the jury on the question of defendant's negligence.—Gordon v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. (Mo.) 80.

§ 286. Evidence, in an action against a railroad for injuries to an employé held insufficient to go to the jury on the question of defendant's negligence.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Romans (Tex.) 1104.

§ 286. Evidence held to raise the question of negligence of a railway company in carrying a car with a defective brakebeam, so as to support an instruction thereon.—Trinity & B. V. Ry. Co. v. Elgin (Tex. Civ. App.) 577.

Civ. App.) 709.

§ 287. Whether plaintiff and a co-employé were fellow servants held a question for the jury.—Crawford v. Sawyer & Austin Lumber Co. (Ark.) 286.

§ 289. Whether a fireman was negligent in remaining on the engine instead of jumping held for the jury.—Woodson v. Prescott & N. W. R. Co. (Ark.) 273.

§ 289. Whether a brakeman was guilty of contributory negligence in going on the track without waiting to see whether his stop signal to the engine was obeyed held a question for the jury.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearcy (Ky.) 1037.

§ 289. An injured railway switchman held not negligent as matter of law in boarding a moving car.—Gordon v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. (Mo.) 80.

§ 289. A switchman attempting to uncouple a caboose from the front end held not negligent as matter of law in trying to board it at the front, instead of the rear, end.—Gordon v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. (Mo.) 80.

§ 289. In an action by a servant for injuries received while helping to move a car partly loaded with ties, where it was not conclusively shown that he was careless in a way that helped bring about the accident, it was not error to refuse to direct a verdict for defendant. —Wilson v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis (Mo. App.) 1083.

§ 289. Whether a brakeman killed while between two defective cars in a train while attempting to stop the train to prevent a wreck was guilty of contributory negligence held for the jury.—Trinity & B. V. Ry. Co. v. Elgin (Tex. Civ. App.) 577.

§ 289. In an action for a fireman's death by the collision of his engine with box cars on a connecting switch, whether decedent was excusable for not seeing the cars before the collision held for the jary.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Holt (Tex. Civ. App.) 581.

§ 289. For a brakeman to be on the track to get on the engine in switching, held not negligence as a matter of law.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Ford (Tex. Civ. App.) 709.

§ 291. Instructions in an action for injuries to an employé held far more favorable to the employer than it was entitled to.—Mason, Hanger & Coleman Co. v. Kennison (Ky.) 999.

§ 291. In an action by a servant for personal injuries, an instruction which required a jury finding that certain acts of negligence directly contributed to cause plaintiff's said injuries, instead of a finding that those acts caused the injuries held erroneous.—Wilson v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis (Mo. App.) 1083.

§ 293. Statement of how instructions as to duty of engineer on discovering peril of section hand on track should be worded.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Lang's Adm'x (Ky.) 993.

§ 293. There being evidence in an action for injury to a brakeman, through nonobservance of a stop signal given by him to the fireman, that the signal was not passed by the fireman to the engineer, held the jury should be instructed that, if it was not so passed, the company was not liable.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearcy (Ky.) 1037.

§ 293. In an action for a fireman's death by collision of his engine with box cars on a connecting switch, where there was evidence of decedent.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Holt (Tex. Civ. App.) 581.

§ 293. In view of pleading and evidence in action for injury to brakeman from getting his foot caught between ties in the track, held the charge could not have been understood to authorize a recovery for a different defect than that pleaded.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Ford (Tex. Civ. App.) 709.

§ 295. Instructions on assumption by a brakeman of risk of unsafe condition of railroad track, held not calculated to confuse and mislead the jury.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Ford (Tex. Civ. App.) 709.

§ 296. In an action for injuries to a railroad fireman, an instruction that plaintiff was negligent as a matter of law in not leaping from the engine held erroneous.—Woodson v. Prescott & N. W. R. Co. (Ark.) 273.

§ 296. An instruction as to contributory negligence of a servant suing for injury criticised, and a proper form given.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearcy (Ky.) 1037.

§ 296. In an action for the death of a brakeman, an instruction held not erroneous because it made the judgment of decedent the criterion by which his conduct was to be measured.—Trinity & B. V. Ry. Co. v. Elgin (Tex. Civ. App.) 577.

§ 296. In an action for the death of a brakeman while attempting to stop a train to prevent injury to it, an instruction relating to his acting on the impulse of the moment held proper under the evidence.—Trinity & B. V. Ry. Co. v. Elgin (Tex. Civ. App.) 577.

IV. LIABILITIES FOR INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS.

(A) Acts or Omissions of Servant.

§ 302. A master is liable for injuries to person and property caused by the negligence of his servant, where the act resulting in the injury is done while the servant is acting within the scope of his employment.—Shamp v. Lambert (Mo. App.) 770.

§ 302. It is a sufficient prima facie showing to render a master liable for negligent injury by his servant that at the time the servant was actually engaged in the performance of the particular duties for which he was employed.—Shamp v. Lambert (Mo. App.) 770.

§ 306. To charge a master with libel for the defamatory words of a servant held necessary to allege and prove that the master directed or authorized the servant to speak the words or afterwards approved or ratified their speaking.—Duquesne Distributing Co. v. Greenbaum (Ky.) 1026.

(B) Work of Independent Contractor.

§ 315. One who employs a contractor exercising an independent employment to do a piece of work is not in general liable for the wrongs of the contractor, his subcontractors, or servants.—Stephenville, N. & S. T. Ry. Co. v. Couch (Tex. Civ. App.) 189; Same v. Carter (Tex. Civ. App.) 192.

§ 315. Railroad company held not liable for the act of construction contractors in scattering rock on adjoining land, where the contractors had not completed the construction of the road or delivered it to the railroad company.—Stephenville, N. & S. T. Ry. Co. v. Couch (Tex. Civ. App.) 189; Same v. Carter (Tex. Civ. App.) 192.

for the acts of an independent contractor stated.—Stephenville, N. & S. T. Ry. Co. v. Couch (Tex. Civ. App.) 189; Same v. Carter (Tex. Civ. App.) 192.

§ 317. Where an independent contractor in the prosecution of his work exercises, in whole or in part, a franchise granted to his employer, the latter is liable for his torts.—Stephenville, N. & S. T. Ry. Co. v. Couch (Tex. Civ. App.) 189; Same v. Carter (Tex. Civ. App.) 192.

§ 318. The defense of independent contractor is not available, where the work or the manner of its execution involves a duty to the public incumbent on the proprietor or employer.—Stephenville, N. & S. T. Ry. Co. v. Couch (Tex. Civ. App.) 189; Same v. Carter (Tex. Civ. App.) 192.

§ 319. The defense of independent contractor is not available, where the injury is the direct or necessary consequence of the work to be done.—Stephenville, N. & S. T. Ry. Co. v. Couch (Tex. Civ. App.) 189; Same v. Carter (Tex. Civ. App.) 192.

§ 323. The defense of independent contractor is not available where the act contracted to be done is wrongful or tortious in itself.—Stephenville, N. & S. T. Ry. Co. v. Couch (Tex. Civ. App.) 189; Same v. Carter (Tex. Civ. App.) 192.

§ 324. The defense of independent contractor is not available, where the proprietor interferes with the contractor in the performance of the work, or it has been completed and accepted.—Stephenville, N. & S. T. Ry. Co. v. Couch (Tex. Civ. App.) 189; Same v. Carter (Tex. Civ. App.) 192.

(C) Actions.

§ 329. The general rule that, when it is attempted to hold a master liable for the wrongful act of his servant, it is sufficient to describe the act, and charge that it was done by the servant acting within the scope of his employment, held not to apply when it is attempted to hold the master in slander for words spoken by his servant.—Duquesne Distributing Co. v. Greenbaum (Ky.) 1026.

§ 330. In an action for injuries to a pedestrian struck by an automobile, the proof held to show prima facie that plaintiff received her injury through the negligence of defendant's servant while acting within the scope of his employment.—Shamp v. Lambert (Mo. App.) 770.

§ 342. The appointment of a substituted trustee in a deed of trust by the beneficiary therein held valid under the terms of the deed of trust and the facts.—Arnold v. Watson (Ark.) 354.

§ 342. Recitals in a deed, executed by a substituted trustee legally appointed, as established by the evidence, held prima facie true.—Arnold v. Watson (Ark.) 354.

§ 369. In an action to set aside a deed on foreclosure of the trust deed, evidence held not to show that the land was appraised at a grossly inadequate value.—Arnold v. Watson (Ark.) 354.

§ 369. In a suit to set aside a deed, executed by a substituted trustee in a trust deed to the beneficiary, evidence held not to show that the beneficiary, by fraud and collusion, prevented other bidders from participating in the sale.—Arnold v. Watson (Ark.) 354.

§ 374. Where land was sold in accordance with law and the provisions of the mortgage, it vested in the purchaser an equitable title, although no deed was made.—Morgan v. Kendrick (Ark.) 278.

X. FORECLOSURE BY ACTION.

(B) Right to Foreclose and Defenses.

§ 405. The condition in an indemnity mortgage to save the mortgagee harmless held not broken until the mortgagee is damnified, but the condition in a mortgage to satisfy a liability, held broken on the accrual of the liability.—Cazort & McGehee Co. v. Dunbar (Ark.) 270.

§ 405. A surety on a supersedeas bond obtaining a mortgage to secure him from liability held entitled to foreclose the same.—Cazort & McGehee Co. v. Dunbar (Ark.) 270.

(F) Pleading and Evidence.

§ 459. In foreclosures, a general denial is sufficient to require proof of the execution of the mortgage, where it is alleged in the pleadings, or shown by the evidence, that the original has been lost or destroyed.—Blair v. Breeding (Tex. Civ. App.) 869.

(I) Judgment or Decree and Execution.

§ 488. Under the express provisions of Civ. Code Prac. § 694, the court, before ordering the sale of real property for payment of a debt, may determine from the pleadings whether the property can be divided without materially impairing its value.—Burge v. Chestnut (Ky.) 989.

I. NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY.

§ 1. "New trial" defined.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Smith (Ark.) 282.

(Russell's St. §§ 3070, 3076), a verdict cannot be set aside on the ground that a juror had served within 12 months.—Netter's Adm'r v. Louisville Ry. Co. (Ky.) 636.

§ 54. Incompetency of a juror held cause for setting aside the verdict, provided due diligence was exercised to discover the facts before the juror was selected.—Netter's Adm'r v. Louisville Ry. Co. (Ky.) 636.

(F) Verdict or Findings Contrary to Law or Evidence.

§ 75. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 341, held that, where the recovery in an action for death equals the actual pecuniary loss, a new trial cannot be granted.—Netter's Adm'r v. Louisville Ry. Co. (Ky.) 636.

§ 75. Where, in an action for injury to a person, the evidence showed the amount of the pecuniary loss sustained, and the verdict was insufficient as compensation, a new trial might be granted.—Netter's Adm'r v. Louisville Ry. Co. (Ky.) 636.

§ 75. In an action for death, a new trial held to be properly granted where the evidence showed the pecuniary loss the estate of decedent sustained, and the amount assessed was insufficient as compensation.—Netter's Adm'r v. Louisville Ry. Co. (Ky.) 636.

(H) Newly Discovered Evidence.

§ 102. An application for a new trial for newly discovered evidence, held insufficient for want of an affidavit of diligence.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Adams (Tex. Civ. App.) 876.

§ 103. Under Kirby's Dig. § 6215, subd. 7, where the only issue in an action for killing stock was their value, defendant was not entitled to a new trial for newly discovered evidence of alleged contributory negligence.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Smith (Ark.) 282.

§ 104. A new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence, which is merely cumulative.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Adams (Tex. Civ. App.) 876.

§ 108. A new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence unless it would change the result.—Million v. Million's Ex'rs (Ky.) 985.

§ 108. A new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence, the subject of which is to contradict an inference from the evidence of the successful party.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Adams (Tex. Civ. App.) 876.

III. PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE NEW TRIAL.

Presumption on appeal as to grounds for extension of time for filing application, see Appeal and Error, § 933.

§ 118. Extension of time to file motion for new trial, though in terms to a day beyond the term, held, under Civ. Code Prac. § 342, to be good to the end of the term.—Dickerson v. Eastern Kentucky Lumber Co. (Ky.) 662.

§ 150. On an application for a new trial for newly discovered evidence, the affidavit of the new witness must be filed, and show that the testimony will be available on another trial.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Adams (Tex. Civ. App.) 876.

I. THE RELATION.

(A) Creation and Requisites.

§ 5. An agreement to share profits is an essential element in every partnership, and the absence of profit sharing is conclusive that a partnership does not exist.—Sawyer v. Burris (Mo. App.) 321.

§ 5. The mere fact that one received one-fourth of the net profits of a business conducted by another held not of itself to constitute him a copartner with such other as between themselves.—Sawyer v. Burris (Mo. App.) 321.

§ 12. Plaintiffs and defendants held partners in the purchase and sale of tobacco.—Dycus v. Brown (Ky.) 1010.

§ 17. The relation of partnership lies in contract, and is to be determined always as between the alleged partners by reference to the matter of intention.—Sawyer v. Burris (Mo. App.) 321.

(C) Evidence.

§ 44. While participation in the profits of a business raises the presumption of the existence of a partnership, such presumption is not conclusive, but may be rebutted by a showing of facts to the contrary.—Sawyer v. Burris (Mo. App.) 321.

II. THE FIRM, ITS NAME, POWERS, AND PROPERTY.

§ 68. A deed to a partnership in its firm name, when the purchase was by the partners individually, held not void in equity, but subject to correction.—Spaulding Mfg. Co. v. Godbold (Ark.) 1063.

IV. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

(B) Nature and Extent of Firm Liabilities.

§ 169. Partners may be held liable as a firm for slander committed by a servant when they authorized him to speak slanderous words for them, or where they ratified the servant's act.—Duquesne Distributing Co. v. Greenbaum (Ky.) 1026.

§ 169. A partnership is, like a corporation, a legal entity, except in a more limited sense, and a firm, like a corporation, may have agents, and be liable for their acts of commission and omission in all cases where a corporation would be liable.—Duquesne Distributing Co. v. Greenbaum (Ky.) 1026.

§ 169. A partnership is not liable for the slanderous utterance of its servants unless the actionable words were spoken by its express consent, direction, or authority, or were ratified by it.—Duquesne Distributing Co. v. Greenbaum (Ky.) 1026.

§ 169. A firm engaged in the business of selling liquor to liquor dealers is not liable for slanderous words uttered by a traveling salesman with respect to a concern not a competitor, where the firm neither authorized the salesman to speak the words or ratified them.—Duquesne Distributing Co. v. Greenbaum (Ky.) 1026.

(C) Application of Assets to Liabilities.

§ 183. An insolvent firm may mortgage its property to secure individual in preference to partnership debts.—Conaway v. Newman Mill & Lumber Co. (Ark.) 353.

(D) Actions by or Against Firms or Partners.

§ 219. A judgment in the name of a partnership, objection not having been made before judgment, held not void.—Spaulding Mfg. Co. v. Godbold (Ark.) 1063.

II. APPLICATION.

§ 38. Debtor held to have the primary right to direct application of payment.—Briggs v. Steel (Ark.) 754.

§ 39. Creditor held entitled to make appropriation of payment, where debtor does not do so.—Briggs v. Steel (Ark.) 754.

§ 39. Defendant held estopped from denying his liability as assignor on certificates of deposit, or that certain payments were not intended to be applied thereon.—Krebs v. Blatz (Ky.) 436.

§ 43. The law will apply a payment to the oldest item of an account, where not appropriated by either debtor or creditor.—Briggs v. Steel (Ark.) 754.

§ 43. An item of an account not due when a payment is made is not the oldest item, to which the payment will be applied in the absence of appropriation by either debtor or creditor.—Briggs v. Steel (Ark.) 754.

IV. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW.

§ 65. The burden of proving payment is on the party alleging it.—Barrett v. Kern (Mo. App.) 774.

§ 68. It will be presumed that a payment made should be applied on notes, though none of them had then matured, where that was the only debt owing by the debtor.—Briggs v. Steel (Ark.) 754.

§ 73. While the sending of money orders through the mail may be prima facie evidence that they were received, and of payment, it was no evidence of payment where the letter containing them was improperly addressed.—Jenkins v. Clopton (Mo. App.) 759.

I. FORM AND ALLEGATIONS IN GENERAL.

§ 8. Allegation of petition that plaintiff, one of two landlords, who paid the other landlord her share of the rent, was subrogated to the rights of the other, held a mere legal conclusion.—Jones v. Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co. (Ky.) 633.

§ 8. An allegation in an injury action against a railroad company that plaintiff was struck by a projection from a passing freight train while walking along the track held not objectionable as alleging a conclusion.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wilcox (Tex. Civ. App.) 588.

§ 20. The petition for death of servant, based on negligence after discovered peril, held not to aver that the peril was seen.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Lang's Adm'x (Ky.) 993.

§ 34. In determining whether a complaint states a cause of action as against a demurrer, every reasonable intendment must be indulged in to support the complaint.—Cazort & McGehee Co. v. Dunbar (Ark.) 270.

§ 34. While on demurrer and before judgment, pleadings are strictly construed against the pleader, after verdict or judgment they are liberally construed to sustain the judgment, and merely formal defects will be held cured.—Winstead v. Hicks (Ky.) 1018.

II. DECLARATION, COMPLAINT, PETITION, OR STATEMENT.

In action for injuries to servant, see Master and Servant, §§ 256–261.

III. PLEA OR ANSWER, CROSS-COMPLAINT, AND AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE.

(A) Defenses in General.

§ 93. A party may file inconsistent pleas.—Postal Telegraph Cable Co. of Texas v. Harriss (Tex. Civ. App.) 358.

§ 129. Averments of a petition are confessed by failure to deny them.—Dycus v. Brown (Ky.) 1010.

IV. REPLICATION OR REPLY AND SUBSEQUENT PLEADINGS.

§ 177. An answer held insufficient, so that failure to deny its allegations was not an admission of their truth.—Montgomery v. Glasscock (Ky.) 668.

§ 177. A party does not admit the allegations of every pleading which he fails to deny.—Montgomery v. Glasscock (Ky.) 668.

§ 177. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1193, a telegraph company, relying on a special contract to relieve itself from liability for delay in the delivery of a message, held required to prove the contract, notwithstanding the replication of plaintiff.—Postal Telegraph Cable Co. of Texas v. Harriss (Tex. Civ. App.) 358.

V. DEMURRER OR EXCEPTION.

To petition for establishment of highway, see Highways, § 29.

§ 210. A demurrer to an amended answer and cross-bill in a suit in equity, which does not question the sufficiency of the pleadings, but alleges new matter in pais, is improper.—Coffman v. Gates (Mo. App.) 1078.

§ 214. Admissions arising on a demurrer do not make good vague and insufficient averments or conclusions of the pleading demurred to or supply its omissions of essential facts.—Bennett v. Bennett (Ky.) 495.

§ 214. For the purposes of a general demurrer, the averments of a petition must be accepted as true.—Le Master v. Dalhart Real Estate Agency (Tex. Civ. App.) 185.

§ 216. In considering a demurrer to a petition, only matters appearing on the face of the petition will be considered.—Porter v. Pecos & N. T. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 897.

VI. AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL PLEADINGS AND REPLEADER.

§ 236. The quarterly court may within its discretion refuse to allow amendments to pleadings offered for some future advantage on a trial in another court.—Hardison v. Pace (Ky.) 671.

§ 236. Refusal of a trial amendment held to be within the discretion of the court.—Dine v. Donnelly (Ky.) 685.

§ 245. The court may permit the filing of an amended petition after it had handed down a verbal opinion in plaintiff's favor.—Diuguid v. Roberts (Ky.) 464.

§ 257. Where the answer alleged that a sum was included in a note by mistake, an amendment to the answer alleging that such sum represented an attorney's fee paid by plaintiff in trying to collect a debt from defendant prior to his adjudication in bankruptcy was properly refused.—Forsythe v. Lexington Banking & Trust Co. (Ky.) 962.

I. THE RELATION.

(A) Creation and Existence.

§ 1. The relation of principal and agent cannot exist, where the person acting acts for himself and is without authority to act for the other.—Palmer & Hardin v. Grand Lodge K. P. of Kentucky (Ky.) 678.

§ 2. Where a power of attorney not coupled with an interest was given in California with nothing in its terms to indicate where it was to be executed, and in an attempt to carry out the powers conferred land in Texas is sought to be sold, the law of Texas will control.—Gilmer v. Veatch (Tex. Civ. App.) 545.

§ 19. In a suit to partition lands, in which plaintiffs claimed an undivided half interest

§ 24. In a suit to partition land in which plaintiffs claimed an undivided one-half interest through a conveyance by an attorney in fact of defendants, evidence held to make it a jury question whether defendants were induced by misrepresentations to execute the power of attorney under which such attorney acted.—Merrill v. Bradley (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

(B) Termination.

§ 34. A power of attorney given by joint owners of land to another joint owner of the same land to sell and convey it, which conveys to the attorney no interest in the land to be sold, is not a power coupled with an interest.—Gilmer v. Veatch (Tex. Civ. App.) 545.

§ 34. An instrument authorizing the sale of land, etc., held a power of attorney coupled with an interest.—Merrill v. Bradley (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

§ 42. Where a woman, after executing a power of attorney to sell her interest in land and before a sale was made by the agent, married, the marriage revoked the power.—Gilmer v. Veatch (Tex. Civ. App.) 545.

§ 43. In Texas lands cannot be sold under a naked power of attorney after the death of the principal.—Gilmer v. Veatch (Tex. Civ. App.) 545.

III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

(A) Powers of Agent.

Requests for instructions as to assurance of authority of agent, see Trial, § 260.

§ 97. An agent held not empowered, under a letter from his principal, to release the latter's lien under a sale bond.—Garth v. Runner's Ex'x (Ky.) 681; Same v. Davis & Johnson, Id.

(C) Unauthorized and Wrongful Acts.

§ 148. A recorded instrument revoking a power of attorney to recover and sell lands and a conveyance of lands to the agent held sufficient to put purchasers of such lands from the agent who had examined the revoking instrument upon notice as to the agent's right to sell any land under the power of attorney.—Merrill v. Bradley (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

§ 148. If the purchasers of land under an agent acting under a power of attorney were not shown to have notice that such power was obtained by the owner by misrepresentations, the fact that it was so obtained would not affect their title.—Merrill v. Bradley (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

(F) Actions.

§ 190. In a suit to partition lands in which plaintiffs claimed a one-half interest through a conveyance by an attorney in fact of defendants, the burden was on defendants to show that plaintiffs had notice of the fact that the power of attorney, under which the attorney acted, was obtained by misrepresentations.—Merrill v. Bradley (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

§ 193. In a suit to partition lands, in which plaintiffs claim an undivided half interest through a conveyance by an attorney in fact, evidence held to make it a jury question whether plaintiffs had notice that the power of attorney was procured by such attorney by misrepresentation.—Merrill v. Bradley (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

II. SURVEY AND DISPOSAL OF LANDS OF UNITED STATES.

(A) Surveys.

§ 26. A mistake in a government survey of a lake may be corrected.—Johnson & Burr v. Elder (Ark.) 1066.

(E) School and University Lands.

Presumptions as to territorial extent of townships as affecting disposition of school land, see Evidence, § 84.

§ 54. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 8161 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3867), the county court held without authority to sell school lands except on a proper petition of the householders of the township.—Doddridge v. Patterson (Mo.) 72.

§ 54. A petition praying for a sale of school lands in a township held not sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the county court to order a sale under Rev. St. 1899, § 8161 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3867).—Doddridge v. Patterson (Mo.) 72.

§ 54. The county court is a court of inferior jurisdiction, and on a proceeding before it for a sale of school lands under Rev. St. 1899, § 8161 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3867), the statutory directions must be observed before it can acquire jurisdiction.—Doddridge v. Patterson (Mo.) 72.

(F) Swamp and Overflowed Lands.

§ 61. Certain land within the meandered lines of a lake, if land instead of lake bed passed to the state under a federal patent of unsurveyed swamp lands, and if the land had been declared such instead of lake bed, the upland owner acquired no riparian rights therein.—Johnson & Burr v. Elder (Ark.) 1066.

III. DISPOSAL OF LANDS OF THE STATES.

§ 143. To acquire title to land under the donation laws, all the requirements of the statute must be fulfilled.—McCracken v. Sisk (Ark.) 725.

§ 143. A donee of land under the donation laws cannot alienate, or in any way dispose of, the land, and no greater right is given him than that of possession.—McCracken v. Sisk (Ark.) 725.

§ 143. Under Kirby's Dig. §§ 4815, 4832, the right to perfect a donation of land and submit final proof held extended to the widow on the death of the donee before the time to submit final proof; and, on her making final proof, she is entitled to a deed in her own right.—McCracken v. Sisk (Ark.) 725.

§ 151. If there be no other or older grant from the state to lands covered by a patent under which a party claims, the patent confers on him the legal title, unless another has by actual adverse possession acquired title thereto dehors a patent.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 151. If land in dispute in forcible entry was patented prior to a patent to plaintiff's lessor under whom he claimed the right to enter, the latter patent would be void, and could not be received as evidence tending to limit the possession of plaintiff's lessor.—Richie v. Owsley (Ky.) 1015.

§ 172. In an action by a vendee against his vendor to recover a payment made on land, the sale of which to defendant by the state was claimed to have been forfeited, a certified copy of an award by the commissioner of the land office to a third party made subsequent to the sale by defendant to plaintiff held admissible, and to raise the presumption that the first sale had been forfeited before the second was made.—Slaughter v. Cooper (Tex. Civ. App.) 173.

§ 172. Under Acts 1901, p. 294, c. 125, § 3, an indorsement by the commissioner of the General Land Office on an application for the purchase of public land that the same was forfeited for failure to reside on the land held not evidence of forfeiture as against the purchaser.—Slaughter v. Cooper (Tex. Civ. App.) 173.

§ 172. When a legislative grant is not made in discharge of some obligation of the government that the law would recognize, the grant is not in a legal sense anything but an act of sovereign grace and a pure donation.—Sherman v. Pickering (Tex. Civ. App.) 536.

§ 173. Acts 1895, p. 67, c. 47, § 11 (Rev. St. 1895, art. 4218f), regulating sale of public free school lands, construed to require a declaration of forfeiture before public lands sold and abandoned will be open to resale.—Tillman v. Erp (Tex. Civ. App.) 547.

§ 173. Acts 1901, p. 294, c. 125, § 3, regulating sale of public school lands, construed to require declaration of forfeiture before public lands sold and abandoned will be again open for sale.—Tillman v. Erp (Tex. Civ. App.) 547.

§ 173. The acceptance of the offer of the state, and the compliance by the applicant to purchase therewith, held to be what will constitute him a purchaser of school lands, and not the acceptance of his application by the Land Commissioner.—Tillman v. Erp (Tex. Civ. App.) 547.

§ 173. If public school land is not on the market when application therefor is filed, the application confers no rights upon the applicant, and cannot be made effective by the acceptance of the Land Commissioner.—Tillman v. Erp (Tex. Civ. App.) 547.

§ 173. If public school land is not on the market and subject to sale when application therefor is filed, a subsequent award by the Commissioner, after the land comes on the market, upon the premature application, is void.—Tillman v. Erp (Tex. Civ. App.) 547.

§ 173. Award of public land on an application made before it came on the market, after the land had been forfeited and had again come on the market, held void.—Tillman v. Erp (Tex. Civ. App.) 547.

§ 173. Acts 1905, p. 35, c. 29, prescribing a time within which a person claiming the right to purchase or lease public school land previously sold or leased to others, shall sue, was intended to bar after one year an action to set aside an award of school land by the Commissioner because of insufficient application.—Tillman v. Erp (Tex. Civ. App.) 547.

§ 173. School lands settled on and sold to another held to be the subject of contract, though other, reinstated the sale and awarded the land to such other, held good defense to the plea of failure of consideration of the notes given for the lands, which were secured by a vendor's lien.—Bynum v. Hobbs (Tex. Civ. App.) 900.

§ 173. A sale of school land prior to the adoption of Acts April 19, 1901 (Laws 1901, p. 294, c. 125), is governed by the law of 1895 (Laws 1895, p. 63, c. 47), requiring forfeitures of sales of school land for nonresidence to be declared by the commissioner.—Samples v. Wever (Tex. Civ. App.) 1129.

§ 173. A purchase of school land held not absolutely void because of a mistake in the application.—Samples v. Wever (Tex. Civ. App.) 1129.

§ 174. Effect of a statute, passed to relieve one entitled to a bounty warrant certificate barred by limitations, stated.—Sherman v. Pickering (Tex. Civ. App.) 536.

§ 175. Where a resurvey of land was had, and the former field notes corrected so that the survey embraced less land, and a patent issued on the corrected field notes only, the owner, in the absence of a showing of mistake, is bound by the patent calls.—Guill v. O'Bryan (Tex. Civ. App.) 593.

§ 178. Where the state through its regular authorized officer makes an award of public lands to one authorized to purchase, the land so far passes out of the state as to authorize its sale by the purchaser, thereby creating between himself and his purchaser the relation of vendor and vendee, and, where possession accompanies such transfer, the second purchaser may not thereafter successfully plead a total failure of consideration upon the forfeiture of his vendor's title.—Slaughter v. Cooper (Tex. Civ. App.) 173.

§ 178. A sale of public land, the title to which is in the state, is not a consideration for the promise to pay another therefor.—Samples v. Wever (Tex. Civ. App.) 1129.

§ 178. A grantee of a purchaser of school land, while the law of 1895 (Laws 1895, p. 63, c. 47), relating to forfeitures, was in force, held to take such title as supports an action against a mere trespasser.—Samples v. Wever (Tex. Civ. App.) 1129.

QUIETING TITLE.

I. RIGHT OF ACTION AND DEFENSES.

§ 1. An action to quiet title under Rev. St. 1899, § 650 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 667), held to lie irrespective of the possession of either plaintiff or defendant.—Mann v. Doerr (Mo.) 86.

§ 10. In a suit to quiet title, plaintiff must succeed on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of that of his adversary.—Johnson & Burr v. Elder (Ark.) 1066.

II. PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF.

§ 29. In a suit to quiet title, plaintiffs held not to have sustained the burden of proof of a paper title to the property in controversy or a better possessory title than that held by defendant.—Burchel v. Withers (Ky.) 469.

§ 30. A tenant in possession under a written lease is a proper party defendant in an action to quiet title under Rev. St. 1899, § 650 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 667), brought against the landlord claiming title.—Mann v. Doerr (Mo.) 86.

§ 36. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 125, subsec. 2, an answer in an action for the recovery of land held to sufficiently describe the land in controversy.—Paducah Cooperage Co. v. Paducah Veneer & Lumber Co. (Ky.) 986.

§ 44. In an action to quiet title, evidence that plaintiff's president knew of the erection of a building by defendant on the land in controversy seven years before, without making objection thereto, held admissible.—Paducah Cooperage Co. v. Paducah Veneer & Lumber Co. (Ky.) 986.

§ 47. Evidence in an action to quiet title held insufficient to warrant submission to the jury of defendant's claim of possession to the land in controversy.—Paducah Cooperage Co. v. Paducah Veneer & Lumber Co. (Ky.) 986.

IV. LOCATION OF ROAD, TERMINI, AND STATIONS.

V. RIGHT OF WAY AND OTHER INTERESTS IN LAND.

Notice to vendee of railroad company of covenants in conveyance of right of way, see Vendor and Purchaser, § 230.

§ 61. A conveyance of land for an interurban railroad right of way is not void because the corporation is not authorized to take and hold land, to exercise the right of eminent domain, or to construct and operate an interurban road.—Knowles v. Northern Texas Traction Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 232.

§ 63. A corporation owning land over which a traction company constructed its track held not entitled to oust the company, but limited to an action for damages.—Knowles v. Northern Texas Traction Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 232.

§ 64. Letters written by a railroad's assistant engineer to a landowner held admissible as evidence of authority of the railroad's former employés to make the contract sued on, or to show ratification thereof.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Sanders (Ark.) 337.

§ 65. Evidence held to support a finding that a corporation owning land agreed to the construction of a right of way over the land for a traction company, authorizing the company to claim the right of way.—Knowles v. Northern Texas Traction Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 232.

§ 65. A corporation giving its consent to the construction of a railroad track over its land held not entitled to revoke the consent but confined to an action for damages resulting from the use of the land.—Knowles v. Northern Texas Traction Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 232.

§ 65. A traction company constructing its right of way over land with the consent of the owner without first complying with municipal ordinances is entitled to hold its right of way as against the owner.—Knowles v. Northern Texas Traction Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 232.

§ 65. A traction company constructing an interurban road over land with the consent of the owner held entitled to rely on estoppel to prevent the owner from ousting it.—Knowles v. Northern Texas Traction Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 232.

§ 72. In an action for breach of a railroad's contract to construct a levee, the measure of damage is the reasonable cost of building the levee the railroad company contracted to construct.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Sanders (Ark.) 337.

§ 72. Facts held to establish sufficient privity to entitle a widow and her daughter to recover for breach of a railroad company's contract to construct a proper levee in consideration of a conveyance of a railroad's right of way.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Sanders (Ark.) 337.

§ 72. A railroad's separate agreement to construct a levee, executed at the same time a landowner conveyed a right of way for a nominal consideration, held an enforceable contract by the railroad company to construct the levee ance of land to it for a right of way held a covenant running with the land, and binding on the grantor's successor.—Louisville, H. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Baskett (Ky.) 957.

§ 72. A verdict for $1,350 for breach of a railroad's covenant to erect and maintain a station on land conveyed to it for a right of way held not excessive.—Louisville, H. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Baskett (Ky.) 957.

§ 72. In an action for breach of a railroad company's covenant to construct its station on land purchased from plaintiff, evidence of the price received for other nearby land on a part of which the station was erected, held admissible.—Louisville, H. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Baskett (Ky.) 957.

§ 72. In an action for breach of a railroad's covenant to construct and maintain a station on land conveyed to it for a right of way, plaintiff's measure of damages was the additional value, if any, which would have accrued to his adjoining lands, but for the breach.—Louisville, H. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Baskett (Ky.) 957.

§ 72. A provision in a deed to a railroad right of way held to constitute a covenant binding the railway company to construct and maintain a station on the strip conveyed.—Louisville, H. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Baskett (Ky.) 957.

§ 357. A railroad company held liable for injuries to a person on a part of the track which the company had no right to expect was clear if he might have been seen in time to have prevented the injury, but, if he was injured on a track that was usually clear, there would be no liability unless the company's servants actually saw his peril in time to have prevented his injury.—Hufft v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 120.

§ 358. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1123 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 970), a railroad company held not liable for injuries received by a bare licensee in crossing the company's tracks by having his foot caught in an unblocked frog.—Hufft v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 120.

§ 369. Statement of duty of railroad company as to warning persons crossing track.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Miller (Ky.) 648.

§ 372. Statement of duty of railroad company as to speed of train as to persons crossing track.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Miller (Ky.) 648.

§ 376. The duty of train employés towards a trespasser on the track stated.—Creager's Adm'r v. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. (Ky.) 458.

§ 376. Statement of duty of railroad company as to precautions as to persons crossing track.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Miller (Ky.) 648.

§ 376. A railroad engineer, on discovering the peril of a person on the track, must use every means within his power to avoid running him down, and this duty continues until the danger of a collision is past.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Mitcham (Tex. Civ. App.) 871.

§ 383. The rule of stop, look, and listen where one crosses a railroad track at a place in constant use by the public held not to obtain in Kentucky.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Miller (Ky.) 648.

§ 385. Statement of duty of traveler as to care for his safety when crossing a railroad.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Miller (Ky.) 648.

§ 390. A person's contributory negligence, in being on a railroad track, is no defense in an action for injuries from being struck by a train, based on discovered peril.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Mitcham (Tex. Civ. App.) 871.

§ 390. That a railroad track was properly fenced and cattle guards erected at the place a person on the track was struck by a train is no defense to a recovery on the theory of discovered peril.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Mitcham (Tex. Civ. App.) 871.

§ 390. In an action for injuries to pedestrian on a railroad track struck by a train, evidence of the use of the track at the place of the accident by pedestrians, held immaterial.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Mitcham (Tex. Civ. App.) 871.

§ 396. In absence of evidence to the contrary, negligence by the railroad company may be inferred from the projecting of a cross-tie on a passing train which struck a pedestrian walking along the track at a safe distance from the train.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wilcox (Tex. Civ. App.) 588.

§ 396. If a pedestrian was struck by a projection from a train while walking along the track at a safe distance from the train, the burden was upon the company in an action for resulting injuries to show that it was without fault.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wilcox (Tex. Civ. App.) 588.

§ 398. In an action for injuries to a pedestrian by being struck by a projection from a passing freight train, evidence held not to show contributory negligence.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wilcox (Tex. Civ. App.) 588.

§ 398. In an action for injuries to one walking along a railroad track by being struck by a projection from a passing freight train, evidence held to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wilcox (Tex. Civ. App.) 588.

§ 400. In an action for the death of a trespasser on defendant's tracks, evidence held not to show that the train employés discovered intestate's peril in time to prevent his death by ordinary care.—Creager's Adm'r v. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. (Ky.) 458.

§ 400. Whether one crossing a railroad track exercised ordinary care for his safety held a question for the jury.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Miller (Ky.) 648.

§ 400. Evidence of gross negligence and consequent punitive damages held insufficient to go to the jury in case of an engine colliding with a person crossing a railroad.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Miller (Ky.) 648.

§ 400. In an action against a railroad company for injuries to a pedestrian on the track struck by a train, the issue of discovered peril held, under the evidence, for the jury.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Mitcham (Tex. Civ. App.) 871.

§ 401. Instruction submitting a question unwarranted by evidence held improper.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Miller (Ky.) 648.

§ 401. An instruction in an action against a railroad company for injuries to a person on its track held erroneous.—Hufft v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 120.

§ 401. In an action for injuries to a person struck by a train, the evidence held to show that his peril was discovered in time to have enabled the engineer to stop.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Mitcham (Tex. Civ. App.) 871.

(H) Injuries to Animals on or near Tracks.

§ 413. A railroad company held not liable for injuries to stock passing upon the right of way through a private gate, in the absence of negligence in the operation of a train.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Butler (Tex. Civ. App.) 176.

§ 446. Whether a railroad company's servants failed to use a proper degree of care to avoid striking plaintiff's animals after discovering them on the track, held for the jury.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Butler (Tex. Civ. App.) 176.

II. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

Conviction of assault with intent as being included in charge of completed offense, see Indictment and Information, § 190.

(B) Evidence.

§ 38. In a prosecution for rape, a statement made by accused four or five months before the commission of the offense held admissible to corroborate prosecutrix.—Sexton v. State (Ark.) 1075.

§ 48. In a prosecution for rape, evidence of the officer who apprehended accused held not objectionable on the theory that it was evidence that prosecutrix identified or described her assailant to the witness who thereupon caused defendant to be apprehended, and as such was hearsay.—Sexton v. State (Ark.) 1075.

§ 48. The particular facts stated by prosecutrix on making an alleged complaint for rape can only be brought out on her cross-examination by defendant, unless he undertakes to impeach her testimony as to the fact of her having made complaint.—Sexton v. State (Ark.) 1075.

§ 51. In view of Kirby's Dig. §§ 2005, 2006, held that evidence was insufficient to support a conviction of rape.—Green v. State (Ark.) 949.

§ 53. Evidence held to show a defendant charged with rape was guilty of assault with intent to rape.—Green v. State (Ark.) 949.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

§ 5. The constitution held the contract of association in a church, binding upon all portions of it, as well as the judicatories thereof.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 12. Civil courts should investigate the jurisdiction of ecclesiastical courts, even though accepting proper decrees therefrom.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 12. Where beyond the constitutional provisions of the church, acts of a church judicatory will be declared void.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 23. In the event of division in a church, that portion adhering to the existing creed held entitled to the church property.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 23. Persons leaving the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and going into the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America held dissenters, and in no position to claim the property of the former church.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 23. In determining property rights, courts will compare creeds, and award the property to the persons adhering to the doctrine existing prior to the schism in the church.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 24. Civil courts, in determining property rights, will investigate whether a church judicatory has acted within its constitutional grant of power.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 24. Civil courts will investigate ecclesiastical decrees, where necessary in determining property rights.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 24. In a case involving title to property, if the parties litigant are not all members of the church, the courts must take the Confession of Faith and interpret it as they would any other instrument, and should not accept as conclusive the interpretation put upon it by the church court.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 28. The interpretation put upon its dogmas by a church held binding on its members, but not on those who are not.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 34. There might be such a similarity between Confessions of Faith as to warrant united action between the churches, without such an identity as is required to pass the property of one to the other.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 34. Certain identity of faiths, etc., held not that identity which the law demands when determining the right to transfer property of one religious organization to another.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 34. There was no identity of doctrine between the confession of faith of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America and the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and hence, as against members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church adhering to its faith, its property could not be passed to the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America in pursuance of any attempted union between them.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 34. Under the constitution of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, held, that its General Assembly had no power, without submitting the matter to the presbyteries, to surrender the name and organization of the church and dissolve it, by consenting to its absorption by the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 34. The constitution of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, having mentioned the specific way by which mergers or unions can be formed with the church—that is, by receiving other bodies "under its jurisdiction"—excludes the idea of enlargement by that church going in under another organization.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 34. It could not be implied that power to effect a merger of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church with the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America was given to the Cumberland General Assembly at the beginning of church organization, and there have been no additional powers given since.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

§ 34. The theory that the power of the General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church is derived, not from the people composing the church, but from the Divine Founder, could not be invoked to sustain an otherwise unauthorized union with the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America.—Boyles v. Roberts (Mo.) 805.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF CONTRACT.

§ 1. A contract of sale, like all other contracts, consists of an agreement between the parties and in addition thereto a delivery of the chattel.—Harper v. State (Ark.) 737.

§ 23. A manufacturer receiving an order for machinery and accepting the cash payment held required to either accept or reject the order within a reasonable time, and, on his retaining the cash payment after the expiration of a reasonable time, he cannot claim that the order was not accepted.—Enterprise Mfg. Co. v. Campbell (Ky.) 1040.

II. CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

§ 68. Under a contract by which defendant bank sold to plaintiff bank all its capital stock and other property, plaintiff held entitled to certain property.—Livingston County Bank v. First State Bank (Ky.) 451.

§ 81. Rights of a seller under a contract for sale of railroad ties, calling for their delivery on a railroad right of way, and for payment of the market price when delivered, stated.—C. H. Smith Tie & Timber Co. v. Weatherford (Ark.) 943.

§ 81. A contract for the manufacture of automatic bale systems held to make time of the essence, rendering the seller liable for damages for failure to make deliveries within the time stipulated.—Reagan Round Bale Co. v. Dickson Car Wheel Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 526.

§ 88. What would constitute a reasonable time to make delivery of railroad ties contracted for held to be for the jury.—C. H. Smith Tie & Timber Co. v. Weatherford (Ark.) 943.

IV. PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT.

(C) Delivery and Acceptance of Goods.

§ 161. A delivery by a seller to a carrier held a delivery to the buyer.—Harper v. State (Ark.) 737.

§ 161. Delivery of goods by the seller to a carrier other than that designated by the buyer held not a delivery of the goods to the buyer.—Woodbine Children's Clothing Co. v. S. Goldnamer & Son (Ky.) 444.

§ 179. A buyer of machinery for delivery on designated dates may waive his right to refuse to accept the same after the dates designated in the contract, and he may receive the same and hold the seller liable for damages for the delay in delivery.—Reagan Round Bale Co. v. Dickson Car Wheel Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 526.

§ 180. A buyer of machinery for delivery in installments held not to waive any claim for damages for the failure of the seller to make deliveries on the dates specified in the contract.—Reagan Round Bale Co. v. Dickson Car Wheel Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 526.

§ 181. In an action to recover a balance due for railroad ties furnished, burden of proof of negligence or wrongful delay in delivery held to be on defendants.—C. H. Smith Tie & Timber Co. v. Weatherford (Ark.) 943.

(D) Payment of Price.

§ 187. A contract for the manufacture and sale of machines held not to entitle the seller to interest on the price, unless the machines were ready for delivery.—Reagan Round Bale Co. v. Dickson Car Wheel Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 526.

V. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

(A) Transfer of Title as Between Parties.

§ 201. Where a contract of sale is silent as to the particular carrier by whom the goods are to be transported, a delivery by the seller to a carrier in the usual and ordinary course of business transfers the property to the buyer.—Harper v. State (Ark.) 737.

§ 201. Where by the buyer's direction goods are delivered to a carrier to be shipped to him, the property passes as soon as the goods are placed in the carrier's possession.—Woodbine Children's Clothing Co. v. S. Goldnamer & Son (Ky.) 444.

§ 202. A purchaser of ties held to acquire title on payment of part of the purchase price and taking possession of the ties.—Guion Mercantile Co. v. Campbell (Ark.) 164.

(D) Bona Fide Purchasers.

VI. WARRANTIES.

VII. REMEDIES OF SELLER.

(E) Actions for Price or Value.

§ 354. Admission in an answer in an action for the balance due on an account construed.—C. H. Smith Tie & Timber Co. v. Weatherford (Ark.) 943.

Impeachment of compromise of claim for damages, see Compromise and Settlement, § 19.

(C) Actions for Breach of Contract.

§ 418. A buyer of a sawmill suing for the non-delivery of the mill held entitled to show that he had contracts with third persons to saw timber, together with the reasonable profits that he could make therefrom.—Enterprise Mfg. Co. v. Campbell (Ky.) 1040.

§ 418. Certain damages claimed by a buyer suing the seller for nondelivery held too remote, and not within the contemplation of the parties.—Enterprise Mfg. Co. v. Campbell (Ky.) 1040.

§ 418. A buyer of a sawmill held to have terminated the contract on a designated date, so that his damages were limited to such damages as he suffered between the time the mill could have been delivered and such date.—Enterprise Mfg. Co. v. Campbell (Ky.) 1040.

§ 418. A buyer of a sawmill suing for the nondelivery thereof may recover the reasonable expenses of any trips which he made to the point of delivery prior to his termination of the contract to ascertain why the mill had not been shipped.—Enterprise Mfg. Co. v. Campbell (Ky.) 1040.

§ 418. A buyer of automatic bale systems held entitled to recover for loss of profits and extra cost of installation because of the failure of the seller to make deliveries on the dates contracted for.—Reagan Round Bale Co. v. Dickson Car Wheel Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 526.

§ 418. Evidence of loss of profits to buyer of machinery held sufficient to warrant recovering for loss of profits, because of the failure of the seller to deliver the same on the dates contracted for.—Reagan Round Bale Co. v. Dickson Car Wheel Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 526.

IX. CONDITIONAL SALES.

§ 479. Evidence held to sustain a verdict, finding that a conditional seller had elected to retake the property and cancel the debt.—Nashville Lumber Co. v. Robinson (Ark.) 350.

§ 479. In an action by a conditional seller of goods on the conditional sale note, an instruction held objectionable as misstating the defense.—Nashville Lumber Co. v. Robinson (Ark.) 350.

§ 479. A conditional seller may not, after retaking the property, maintain an action on the debt.—Nashville Lumber Co. v. Robinson (Ark.) 350.

§ 137. In an action by an execution defendant, on an indemnity bond given to the sheriff by the execution plaintiff, to recover damages for the levy on and sale of alleged exempt property, allegations of the petition held sufficient to sustain a judgment for plaintiff.—Winstead v. Hicks (Ky.) 1018.

§ 138. In an action by an execution defendant on an indemnity bond given to the sheriff, evidence held to support a finding that plaintiff notified the sheriff that he claimed the property levied on to be exempt.—Winstead v. Hicks (Ky.) 1018.

§ 139. In an action by the execution defendant on an indemnity bond given the sheriff by the execution plaintiff, the measure of damages for levying on and selling exempt property is the same as in trover, viz., the value of the property, with interest (in the discretion of the jury) from the time of its conversion.—Winstead v. Hicks (Ky.) 1018.

§ 151. In an action against a surety on an indemnity bond to an attaching sheriff, a defense that the sheriff, in levying, had acted wantonly, willfully, maliciously, and contrary to the attaching creditors' instructions, was an affirmative defense, the burden to establish which rested upon the surety.—Dine v. Donnelly (Ky.) 685.

§ 151. Evidence held not to show that a sheriff acted willfully and maliciously and against the wishes and directions of attaching creditors in levying an attachment.—Dine v. Donnelly (Ky.) 685.

IV. LIABILITIES ON OFFICIAL BONDS.

§ 157. An action on an official bond of a constable held to lie on his disregarding Rev. St. 1899, § 3163 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1799), and levying on and selling exempt property.—Parketon v. Pugsley (Mo. App.) 789.

I. NATURE AND GROUNDS OF REMEDY IN GENERAL.

§ 7. Plaintiff's refusal to accept a vendor's offer to convey the land without obtaining the release of certain vendor's liens which he had contracted to satisfy was no defense to plaintiff's subsequent suit for specific performance.—Durham v. Breathwit (Tex. Civ. App.) 890.

§ 7. The filing of a suit in trespass to try title which was subsequently turned into a suit for specific performance held no defense to plaintiff's right to specific performance.—Durham v. Breathwit (Tex. Civ. App.) 890.

§ 13. Inability of a vendor to perform his engagement to procure a release of certain liens held no defense to a suit for specific performance.—Durham v. Breathwit (Tex. Civ. App.) 890.

III. GOOD FAITH AND DILIGENCE.

§ 92. Plaintiff's waiver of a vendor's obligation which he had been unable to perform held fense to an action by the vendor for specific performance.—Garth v. Runner's Ex'x (Ky.) 681; Same v. Davis & Johnson, Id.

IV. PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF.

§ 120. In an action for specific performance, evidence of plaintiff's possession and improvements held admissible on the issue of his abandonment of the contract.—Durham v. Breathwit (Tex. Civ. App.) 890.

§ 121. A vendor's statement that he was unable to procure certain vendor's lien notes or show payment held insufficient to establish his defense to a suit for specific performance that it was impossible for him to perform.—Durham v. Breathwit (Tex. Civ. App.) 890.

§ 131. In a suit for specific performance, a verdict held sufficient to justify a judgment as between all the parties, including a stakeholder joined as a defendant.—Durham v. Breathwit (Tex. Civ. App.) 890.

I. ENACTMENT, REQUISITES, AND VALIDITY IN GENERAL.

§ 5. Proclamation of Governor convening the 30th Legislature in special session held to sufficiently state the purposes of the session, as required by Const. art. 3, § 40, to authorize the enactment of Act May 14, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 447, c. 8), relating to contests of local option elections.—Stockard v. Reid (Tex. Civ. App.) 1144.

§ 64. Even if Sp. Laws 1897, p. 150, c. 11, as amended by Sp. Laws 1905, p. 262, c. 30, relating to highways gave the power of suspension of the law in violation of Const. art. 1, § 28, the law would not be held invalid for the reason, but the law would stand, and the provision for suspension would fail.—Bluitt v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 168.

§ 64. Act June 19, 1897 (Acts 25th Leg. Sp. Sess. p. 39, c. 12), amending Rev. St. 1895, art. 1069, held not invalid in so far as it provides for an exchange of judges, even if the last clause limiting the right of the parties to select a judge were in violation of Const. art. 5, § 11.—Oates v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 370.

§ 64. An entire statute will not fall because of unconstitutional provisions, if sufficient remains to effect the object without the aid of the invalid portions.—Oates v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 370.

II. GENERAL AND SPECIAL OR LOCAL LAWS.

§ 92. It is no objection to a classification of cities for legislative purposes that one of the classes contains but one city.—City of Louisville v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 411.

§ 95. Laws 1908, p. 156, c. 61, requiring a minimum school tax of 36 mills in cities of the second class, held not in violation of Const. § 181.—City of Louisville v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 411.

§ 95. Laws 1908, p. 156, c. 61, requiring a minimum school tax rate of 36 mills in cities of the second class, held not special legislation in violation of Const. § 59, subsec. 15.—City of Louisville v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 411.

§ 97. Under Const. art. 8, § 9, as amended in 1890, giving the Legislature power to pass local laws for the maintenance of public roads and highways, it could give control to the county commissioners over citizens residing in incorporated cities and towns as respects work upon such roads and highways.—Bluitt v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 168.

III. SUBJECTS AND TITLES OF ACTS.

§ 109. A statute does not violate Const. art. 4, § 28 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 185), requiring but one subject to be expressed in the title, where it is not designed to cover vicious and incongruous legislation.—State ex rel. Equitable Life Assur. Society of United States v. Vandiver (Mo.) 45; State ex rel. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Same (Mo.) 63; State ex rel. Prudential Life Ins. Co. of America v. Same, Id.

§ 113. Act March 1, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 315), relating to the salaries of employés of life insurance companies, held not objectionable as containing a plurality of subjects not expressed in its title.—State ex rel. Equitable Life Assur. Society of United States v. Vandiver (Mo.) 45; State ex rel. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Same (Mo.) 63; State ex rel. Prudential Life Ins. Co. of America v. Same, Id.

V. REPEAL, SUSPENSION, EXPIRATION, AND REVIVAL.

§§ 152, 158. A statute is held to be repealed only by an express provision of a subsequent law or by necessary implication.—State ex rel. Holladay v. Rinke (Mo. App.) 159.

§ 161. A later statute will not impliedly repeal a former one, where the two are not irreconcilably inconsistent and can stand together.—State ex rel. Holladay v. Rinke (Mo. App.) 159.

§ 171. Sp. Laws 1897, p. 150, c. 110, amended by Sp. Laws 1905, p. 262, c. 30, creating a road system for Ellis county, held not violative of Const. art. 1, § 28.—Bluitt v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 168.

VI. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

(A) General Rules of Construction.

Statutes relating to time for filing certificates and petitions of nomination, see Elections, § 139.

§ 181. The court, in construing a statute, will so interpret it as to conform with the intent of the Legislature, and it must be given a reasonable construction, keeping in view the purposes of, as well as the circumstances surrounding, its enactment.—State ex rel. Sikes v. Williams (Mo.) 64.

§ 181. The effect and consequences of any proposed construction of the law may be considered in ascertaining the probable intention of the Legislature.—State ex rel. Sanks v. Johnson (Mo. App.) 780.

§ 211. The court in construing a statute may look to its title as an aid in ascertaining the intention thereof.—Kinnaird v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 489.

§ 214. If a statute is not ambiguous, its meaning and legislative intent must be determined from the language used.—Gross v. Colonial Assur. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 517.

§ 225. Where there are two statutes, and the provisions of one apply specially to a particular subject, which clearly includes the matter and the other general in its terms, and such that, if standing alone, it would include the same matter, and they thus conflict with each other, the special act must be taken as an exception, if not a repeal of the general statute, especially where the special statute was enacted subsequent to the general statute.—Gilkeson v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 138.

(B) Particular Classes of Statutes.

§ 241. A penal statute is to be strictly construed.—Thiebes-Stierlin Music Co. v. Weiss (Mo. App.) 1099.

(C) Time of Taking Effect.

§ 253. Act approved March 19, 1908 (Acts 1908, p. 55, c. 15), relating to the violation of a local option law, would not apply to a transaction made in March of that year in view of Const. § 55.—Boggs v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 433.

(D) Retroactive Operation.

Statutes relating to acknowledgment of conveyance of homestead, see Homestead, § 119.

I. ESTABLISHMENT, CONSTRUCTION, AND MAINTENANCE.

Lease of road as affecting liability for injuries to passenger, see Carriers, § 306.

II. REGULATION AND OPERATION.

Applicability of instructions to case in action for injuries, see Trial, § 252.

§ 75. An ordinance requiring motormen to keep a vigilant watch for all persons on foot, especially children, either on the track or moving toward it, and on the first appearance of danger to stop within the shortest time and space practicable consistent with safety of passengers, is a reasonable exercise of police power.—Spencer v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo.) 108.

§ 90. Where a standing vehicle is close to the street car track, the fact that a part of the car passes the vehicle in safety will not excuse the company if another part of the car strikes it. —Louisville Ry. Co. v. Flannery (Ky.) 663.

§ 90. A motorman held required to stop the car until a vehicle near the track is moved to a place of safety.—Louisville Ry. Co. v. Flannery (Ky.) 663.

§ 94. The violation of an ordinance requiring motormen to keep a vigilant watch for persons on foot, either on the track or moving toward it, is negligence per se.—Spencer v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo.) 108.

§ 95. To relieve a street railroad company from liability for killing a child struck by a car on the ground that the child came on the track so close to the car that the motorman, by ordinary care, could not stop it in time to prevent the injury, it must appear that the car was run at a reasonable speed.—Netter's Adm'r v. Louisville Ry. Co. (Ky.) 636.

§ 110. In an action for injuries to a traveler in collision with a street car, the petition held to sufficiently charge that the motorman's failure to use ordinary care to discover plaintiff's peril, and his operation of the car at an unsafe speed, and the failure to use any care to stop in time to prevent the injury, were the causes thereof.—Galveston Electric Co. v. Wilkins (Tex. Civ. App.) 538.

§ 114. Evidence in an action for injury to a driver of a steam roller thrown therefrom by collision with a street car held to support a finding that the motorman could by ordinary care have avoided the collision after the danger became apparent.—Slezak v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo. App.) 1095.

§ 117. In an action for injuries by being thrown to the ground by catching plaintiff's foot while crossing over a pile of old rails, ties, etc., which defendant had piled along the street, whether defendant had the right to make the repairs in that manner, and used more of the killed by a street car, evidence held sufficient to warrant the submission of the case to the jury on the view that, after she was struck by the car, she was dragged to her death by the motorman's failure to stop it quicker, and that the car could have been stopped sooner than it was. —Spencer v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo.) 108.

§ 118. In an action for the death of a child killed by a street car, an instruction held not to be subject to an objection that it submitted a question of law and was misleading.—Spencer v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo.) 108.

§ 118. In an action for the death of a child, held, that there was no error in an instruction relating to contributory negligence.—Spencer v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo.) 108.

§ 118. In an action for injury to a steam roller driver thrown therefrom by collision with a street car, held, that there was no error in the use of the words "vigilant watch" in an instruction, taking it in its entirety, and especially when considered with an instruction defining ordinary care.—Slezak v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo. App.) 1095.

§ 118. A requested charge in a street car collision case held defective and confusing.—Slezak v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo. App.) 1095.

§ 1. Subrogation held only allowed where there is some equitable reason for it.—Jones v. Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co. (Ky.) 633.

§ 7. Sureties of a sheriff, who have been obliged to make good a default of the sheriff held entitled to be subrogated to his rights in an indemnity bond given by attaching creditors. —Dine v. Donnelly (Ky.) 685.

§ 26. One who pays a debt for another voluntarily held not ordinarily subrogated to the rights of the creditor.—Jones v. Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co. (Ky.) 633.

§ 27. Equity will subrogate one advancing money to pay a purchase-money note, reserving a lien on the land, to the creditor's rights under the lien.—Manning v. Green (Tex. Civ. App.) 721.

§ 41. An action by a cross-petition held properly brought under Civ. Code Prac. § 96, subsec. 3.—Dine v. Donnelly (Ky.) 685.

II. CONSTITUTIONAL REQUIREMENTS AND RESTRICTIONS.

§ 40. Sp. Laws 1897, p. 155, c. 110, § 15, amended by Sp. Laws 1905, p. 263, c. 30, § 15, making persons delinquent in payment of poll taxes required by Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 5048, subject to road duty, held not violative of Const. art. 8, § 1.—Bluitt v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 168.

§ 42. Laws 1908, p. 156, c. 61, providing for a minimum school tax in cities of the second class, held not in violation of Const. § 181, because the tax is nonuniform.—City of Louisville v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 411.

VII. PAYMENT AND REFUNDING OR RECOVERY OF TAX PAID.

§ 534. A sale of land for delinquent taxes held void under the rule that a bona fide attempt to pay all the taxes frustrated by the mistake of the collector is equivalent to actual payment.—Scroggin v. Ridling (Ark.) 1053.

VIII. COLLECTION AND ENFORCEMENT AGAINST PERSONS OR PERSONAL PROPERTY.

(B) Summary Remedies and Actions.

§ 581. Under Ky. St. 1909, § 4149 (Russell's St. § 6008), no demand for delinquent taxes is required in case of a nonresident.—James v. Blanton (Ky.) 951; Same v. Luscher (Ky.) 954.

§ 589. Where, in an action for taxes, those for certain years were admittedly barred by limitation, it was error to include them in the judgment.—Morgan v. Board of Councilmen of City of Frankfort (Ky.) 1033.

(C) Remedies for Wrongful Enforcement.

Jurisdiction of police court, see Courts, § 178.
Jurisdiction of quarterly court, see Courts, § 180.

IX. SALE OF LAND FOR NONPAYMENT OF TAX.

§ 641. There can be no citation to an estate as an estate to appear to defend an action.—Perry v. Whiting (Tex. Civ. App.) 903.

§ 647. There can be no judgment against an estate as an estate.—Perry v. Whiting (Tex. Civ. App.) 903.

§ 648. Where a suit to foreclose a lien for taxes was brought solely against an estate, and citation was addressed to such estate, and judgment rendered against it, the owner of the property was not bound.—Perry v. Whiting (Tex. Civ. App.) 903.

§ 652. A petition to restrain a sale of land sold to the state for taxes held insufficient.—James v. Blanton (Ky.) 951; Same v. Luscher (Ky.) 954.

§ 658. A county clerk's failure to attach to the record of the list and notice of sale of delinquent tax land the certificate required by Mansf. Dig. § 5763, held fatal.—Johnson & Burr v. Elder (Ark.) 1066.

X. REDEMPTION FROM TAX SALE.

§ 699. Under Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4152, 4154 (Russell's St. §§ 6010, 6014), the owner of land sold to the state for taxes may devest the state's title after the expiration of two years by paying the taxes, penalties, and interest, prior to a sale of the land by the revenue agent.—James v. Blanton (Ky.) 951; Same v. Luscher (Ky.) 954.

XI. TAX TITLES.

(A) Title and Rights of Purchaser at Tax Sale.

§ 727. Ky. St. 1909, § 4154 (Russell's St. § 6014), regulating the title acquired by the state to land sold to it for taxes and not redeemed, held valid.—James v. Blanton (Ky.) 951; Same v. Luscher (Ky.) 954.

§ 730. Under Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4152, 4154 (Russell's St. §§ 6010, 6014), the state, on bidding in land, acquires a lien for taxes and penalty until the redemption period has expired, when the fee vests in the state, if the land is not redeemed.—James v. Blanton (Ky.) 951; Same v. Luscher (Ky.) 954.

§ 734. A county attorney's failure to perform the duties required by Ky. St. 1909, § 4153 (Russell's St. § 6013), with reference to land sold to the state for taxes, does not affect the state's title to land so sold and not redeemed within two years.—James v. Blanton (Ky.) 951; Same v. Luscher (Ky.) 954.

§ 736. Where land sold to the state for taxes was not redeemed within two years, the state's title was not barred by limitation until 15 years after the expiration of the redemption period.—James v. Blanton (Ky.) 951; Same v. Luscher (Ky.) 954.

(B) Tax Deeds.

As color of title, notoriety of possession thereunder, see Adverse Possession, § 30.

(D) Rights and Remedies of Purchaser of Invalid Title.

§ 823. Ky. St. 1909, § 4036 (Russell's St. § 5928), providing for a lien on tax lands on vacation of the sale, held applicable to lands sold to the state for taxes, as well as lands sold to individuals.—James v. Blanton (Ky.) 951; Same v. Luscher (Ky.) 954.

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES.

II. REGULATION AND OPERATION.

Assumption by judge as to facts in instruction in action for negligence in delivery of message, see Trial, § 191.

Negligent failure to transmit message calling physician as proximate cause of death, see Death, § 17.
Waiver of objections to pleading in action for failure to deliver message, see Pleading, § 418.

§ 26. Act Cong. July 24, 1866, c. 230, 14 Stat. 221, held not to give telegraph companies accepting its terms a federal charter rendering them agencies of the federal government, whereby a state would not be able to prescribe conditions upon their right to do a local business in the state.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. State (Tex. Civ. App.) 194.

§ 27. The law of the state from which a telegram is sent for delivery in another state determines whether the addressee may recover for mental anguish for negligent delay in the delivery of the message at destination.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Parsley (Tex. Civ. App.) 226.

§ 31. A telegraph company may prescribe reasonable rules for its business, and reasonable hours during which messages may be sent and delivered at certain offices.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Harris (Ark.) 1051.

§ 36. The contractual obligation of a telephone company accepting a message for transmission is to use reasonable diligence to deliver it to the addressee.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Parsley (Tex. Civ. App.) 226.

§ 37. A telegraph or telephone company accepting a message for delivery beyond its ordinary delivery limits, and exacting a fee in advance, held required to use only reasonable diligence or ordinary care to deliver the message within a reasonable time.—Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Maxberry (Ky.) 447.

§ 38. A transmitting agent who knows, or should know, that on account of the closing of the receiving office there will be delay in delivery of an urgent message must inform the sender of the fact, and the telegraph company is liable for damages resulting from his failure to do so.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Harris (Ark.) 1051.

§ 38. A transmitting agent of a telegraph company held bound to know the rules of other offices as to office hours.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Harris (Ark.) 1051.

§ 56. The addressee of a message may sue a telephone company for mental anguish resulting from the breach of contract to promptly deliver the message.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Parsley (Tex. Civ. App.) 226.

§ 57. A contract by a telegraph company for the transmission of a message held a contract rendering it liable for the negligence of another company employed in the performance of the contract.—Postal Telegraph Cable Co. of Texas v. Harriss (Tex. Civ. App.) 358.

§ 66. Evidence in an action against a telegraph company for negligence in delivering a message as to what a boy at the hotel to whom the message was delivered said held inadmissible.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Sockwell (Ark.) 1046.

§ 66. In an action against a telegraph company for mental anguish caused by negligence in delivering a message, evidence that plaintiff's father had made him a gift of land, and that he was financially unable to visit his father often, held admissible.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Sockwell (Ark.) 1046.

§ 66. In an action against a telegraph company for negligence in delivering a message, evidence as to the method of attempting to find an addressee when no address was given except the name of the town held inadmissible.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Sockwell (Ark.) 1046.

§ 66. A telephone company sued in Texas by an addressee of a message sent from Arkansas for delivery in Oklahoma, for mental anguish for failure to promptly deliver, held to have the burden of proving that the laws of Arkansas do not permit a recovery for mental anguish.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Parsley (Tex. Civ. App.) 226.

§ 66. A telephone company sued in Texas for mental anguish for nondelivery of a message sent from Arkansas for delivery in Oklahoma held required to show that a recovery could not be had under the laws of Oklahoma for mental anguish for a tort committed therein.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Parsley (Tex. Civ. App.) 226.

§ 66. In an action against a telegraph company for failure to deliver a message, thereby depriving the sender of the privilege of buying bank stock, certain evidence held admissible.—Postal Telegraph Cable Co. of Texas v. Harriss (Tex. Civ. App.) 358.

§ 66. A sender of a message, suing for the negligent delay in the delivery thereof because he was thereby deprived of the privilege of buying bank stock, need only show that he would have obtained the stock if the message had been promptly delivered to the sendee.—Postal Telegraph Cable Co. of Texas v. Harriss (Tex. Civ. App.) 358.

§ 66. In an action against a telegraph company for negligent delay in delivering a message, thereby depriving the sender of the privilege of buying bank stock, certain evidence held to show that the sender would have acquired the stock had the message been promptly delivered.—Postal Telegraph Cable Co. of Texas v. Harriss (Tex. Civ. App.) 358.

§ 66. In an action for failure to transmit a telegram, evidence held to justify a finding that if plaintiff had received the message in time she could have attended her father's funeral.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. McDavid (Tex. Civ. App.) 893.

§ 68. Evidence held not to show that one suffered mental anguish because of the nondelivery of a telegram.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Archie (Ark.) 1045.

§ 68. A contract by a telephone company for the delivery of a message entered into in the state of Arkansas contains among the substantive provisions the right granted the addressee by Kirby's Dig. § 7947, to recover damages for mental anguish for a failure of a performance of its duty.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Parsley (Tex. Civ. App.) 226.

§ 70. In an action against a telegraph company for failing to deliver to plaintiff a message whereby plaintiff was deprived of attending her sister's funeral, rule as to measure of damages stated.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Teague (Ky.) 484.

§ 71. There is no fixed rule for measuring damages for failure of a death message, and it must clearly appear that the amount allowed is excessive before it will be disturbed on appeal.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. McDavid (Tex. Civ. App.) 893.

§ 71. In an action for failure to deliver a message, $1,350 damages held not excessive.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. McDavid (Tex. Civ. App.) 893.

§ 73. Whether the sender of the message, suing for the negligent delay in delivery because he was thereby deprived of the privilege of purchasing bank stock from the sendee, would have obtained the stock had the message been promptly delivered is for the jury.—Postal Telegraph Cable Co. of Texas v. Harriss (Tex. Civ. App.) 358.

§ 118. Counsel may present to the jury their theory of the law applicable, so that, where plaintiff alleged in an action for injuries caused by being struck by a projection from a passing train that the train was running at a high speed, plaintiff's counsel could argue that such excessive speed was negligence.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wilcox (Tex. Civ. App.) 588.

§ 121. A statement of plaintiff's counsel, in argument, that the statute (Rev. St. 1895, art. 2268) allowed witnesses only $1 a day, and that defendant was paying his witnesses from C. more than such sum, held not reversible error.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Adams (Tex. Civ. App.) 876.

§ 121. In an action for injuries to a railroad employé, certain of defendant's witnesses having testified that they had been furnished free transportation to the place of trial, the court did not err in permitting plaintiff's attorney to argue that this was a violation of Gen. Laws 1907, p. 93, c. 72.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Adams (Tex. Civ. App.) 876.

§ 121. A statement made by plaintiff's counsel in argument, concerning the testimony of a physician, held proper.—Lewis v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1090.

§ 133. Where the court charged that in arriving at a verdict the jury were to be governed by the law given in the instructions, and the charges given were correct, any error in the views of counsel as to the law applicable stated to the jury in argument could not have misled the jury.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wilcox (Tex. Civ. App.) 588.

(D) Applicability to Pleadings and Evidence.

§ 251. Instructions must not only be within the scope of the evidence, but they must be within the scope of the petition.—Hufft v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 120.

§ 251. Instructions, proceeding on the theory that one of two causes of action on which plaintiff was not permitted to recover was the only one alleged, held properly denied.—Lewis v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1090.

§ 251. Where a party alleged facts entitling him to the foreclosure of a deed operating as a mortgage, an instruction authorizing a verdict for defendant, not alleging or proving facts sufficient to defeat the foreclosure, held erroneous. —Elliott v. Morris (Tex. Civ. App.) 209.

§ 251. In an action for injuries to pedestrian on a railroad track struck by a train; an instruction submitting the issue of contributory negligence, held properly refused.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Mitcham (Tex. Civ. App.) 871.

§ 251. Refusal to submit an issue of contributory negligence in an action against a carrier held not error.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Henson (Tex. Civ. App.) 1127.

§ 252. It is not error to refuse instructions requested, where they are inapplicable to the evidence.—Guion Mercantile Co. v. Campbell (Ark.) 164.

§ 252. Where, in an action for breach of a building contract, there was no evidence that certain statements by the builder concerning the building had been omitted from the contract by fraud or mistake, the court erred in submitting such issue to the jury.—Hartford Mill Co. v. Hartford Tobacco Warehouse Co. (Ky.) 477.

§ 252. Where the evidence is that only the engineer of a train discovered the peril of a section hand on the tracks, held, the instructions should be not as to discovery of the peril by the "agents and servants" of the company, but by the "engineer."—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Lang's Adm'x (Ky.) 993.

§ 252. Instructions should be based on the evidence, and a view of the case should not be set out in an instruction when there is no evidence to support it.—Ratliff v. Daniel's Ex'r (Ky.) 1034.

§ 252. Where there was evidence, in an action for injury to a brakeman, of no negligence of a superior servant of the railroad company, except that of its engineer, the instructions as to finding negligence should have been as to that of the "engineer," instead of that of its "agents" and superior "servants."—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearcy (Ky.) 1037.

§ 252. The court was not required to charge that a passenger could not recover for injuries received from a premature start as she was endeavoring to alight where there was no evidence of the time given.—Westervelt v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo.) 114.

§ 252. An instruction held error; it not being supported by the evidence.—Reynolds v. United Rys. Co. (Mo. App.) 1093.

§ 252. A request to charge held properly refused as unsupported by the evidence.—Pecos & N. T. R. Co. v. Coffman (Tex. Civ. App.) 218.

§ 252. A request to charge, submitting an issue not raised by the evidence, is properly refused.—Galveston Electric Co. v. Wilkins (Tex. Civ. App.) 538.

§ 252. In trespass to try title, where defendant claimed by limitations, a charge that the inclosure of a tract claimed would be sufficient, notwithstanding temporary breaks in the fence, if enough was left to give notice of defendant's adverse claims, was properly refused where the evidence did not show any break in the only fence constructed by defendant before the period of limitations began to run.—Hedrick v. Kilgore (Tex. Civ. App.) 892.

§ 253. Instructions requested for defendant which ignored facts essential to a finding for him were properly refused.—Jenkins v. Clopton (Mo. App.) 759.

§ 253. A request to charge held properly refused as ignoring other injuries testified to than that specified.—Pecos & N. T. R. Co. v. Coffman (Tex. Civ. App.) 218.

§ 253. An instruction ignoring issues pleaded and sustained by evidence sufficient to raise a jury question is properly refused.—Reagan Round Bale Co. v. Dickson Car Wheel Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 526.

§ 253. An instruction, in an action for injuries to a traveler in collision with a street car, held not objectionable for ignoring the question whether the car could have been stopped in time to have avoided the collision with safety to passengers.—Galveston Electric Co. v. Wilkins (Tex. Civ. App.) 538.

(E) Requests or Prayers.

§ 255. In an action for a balance due on an account, held that, if defendants were not satisfied with a charge, they should have requested a specific instruction explaining its meaning.—C. H. Smith Tie & Timber Co. v. Weatherford (Ark.) 943.

§ 255. The court is not bound to instruct on defendant's theory of the case unless requested to do so by proper instruction.—Jenkins v. Clopton (Mo. App.) 759.

§ 256. Where an instruction is not affirmatively erroneous, a party must request a proper charge supplying the omissions complained of. —Knowles v. Northern Texas Traction Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 232.

§ 260. It is not error to refuse requested instructions, where they are fully covered by others given.—Guion Mercantile Co. v. Campbell (Ark.) 164; Woodson v. Prescott & N. W. R. Co. (Ark.) 273; Jenkins v. Clopton (Mo. App.) 759; Knowles v. Northern Texas Traction Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 232; Galveston Electric Co. v. Wilkins (Tex. Civ. App.) 538; Trinity & B. V. Ry. Co. v. Elgin (Tex. Civ. App.) 577; St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wilcox (Tex. Civ. App.) 588; Same v. Ford (Tex. Civ. App.) 709; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Mitcham (Tex. Civ. App.) 871; Johnson v. W. H. Goolsby Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 883.

§ 260. Instructions given in an action for injuries in a railroad crossing accident held to sufficiently inform the jury on the issue of contributory negligence to render harmless the refusal of a certain charge.—Palmer v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1087.

§ 260. In a will contest on the ground of undue influence and lack of testamentary capacity, the refusal of special charges held proper in view of the general charge.—Gallagher v. Neilon (Tex. Civ. App.) 564.

§ 260. In an action for the death of a brakeman while attempting to stop a train to prevent injury to it, the refusal to give a charge on contributory negligence held not erroneous in view of the charge given.—Trinity & B. V. Ry. Co. v. Elgin (Tex. Civ. App.) 577.

§ 260. It was not error to refuse a requested charge where the facts grouped therein were sufficiently grouped and submitted in the main charge.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Holt (Tex. Civ. App.) 581.

§ 261. A party cannot complain of the refusal to give a charge unless it is correct in every particular.—C. H. Smith Tie & Timber Co. v. Weatherford (Ark.) 943.

§ 262. The insertion in an instruction given at plaintiff's request of a requirement which she was not bound to prove in order to recover held not to preclude her from having the case submitted in another instruction stating only the facts essential to her recovery.—Groshong v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis (Mo. App.) 1084.

(G) Construction and Operation.

§ 295. An abstract instruction, if not based on the evidence, held not reversible error.—C. H. Smith Tie & Timber Co. v. Weatherford (Ark.) 943.

§ 295. Instructions on assumption by a brakeman of risk of unsafe condition of railroad track, held not calculated to confuse and mislead the jury.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Ford (Tex. Civ. App.) 709.

§ 295. Paragraph of a charge cannot be considered as assuming a fact, when other paragraphs clearly leave it to the jury.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Ford (Tex. Civ. App.) 709.

VIII. CUSTODY, CONDUCT, AND DELIBERATIONS OF JURY.

§ 307. It is the better practice not to allow the jury to take papers to the jury room for examination after the case is submitted unless by consent of counsel.—Watson's Ex'r v. Watson (Ky.) 626.

IX. VERDICT.

Harmless error, see Appeal and Error, § 1070.
Presumptions as to on appeal or error, see Appeal and Error, § 930.

(A) General Verdict.

§ 333. In an action on a note and to foreclose a vendor's lien, the verdict, when aided by the petition, held sufficiently definite.—Samples v. Wever (Tex. Civ. App.) 1129.

§ 343. The petition may be looked to, to aid in construing the verdict.—Samples v. Wever (Tex. Civ. App.) 1129.

X. TRIAL BY COURT.

(B) Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law.

§ 390. Acts 1st Called Sess. 30th Leg. 1907, p. 446, c. 7, § 1, authorizes the filing of conclusions of law and fact within 10 days after adjournment of the court, without a previous order.—Kimbell v. Powell (Tex. Civ. App.) 541.

XI. WAIVER AND CORRECTION OF IRREGULARITIES AND ERRORS.

§ 412. Where defendants, basing their objection on the statute of frauds, urged that plaintiff was not entitled to make proof of his allegations by parol evidence, and the objection to oral proof is overruled, they did not afterwards waive the objection by voluntarily testifying to the alleged conversations as understood by them.—McKee v. Rudd (Mo.) 312.

§ 412. The statute of frauds, raised by defendants' general denial, was not waived by requesting a finding of facts based on all the testimony, a part of which had been admitted over their objection, based on the statute.—McKee v. Rudd (Mo.) 312.

§ 412. The statute of frauds raised by defendants' general denial held not to have been waived by a request for declarations of law, nor by a motion for a new trial which failed to mention the statute.—McKee v. Rudd (Mo.) 312.

§ 424. Error in refusing a charge as to the burden of proof in an action for injuries to a passenger held not cured by the giving of a special charge in conflict with a charge given for plaintiff.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Duncan (Tex. Civ. App.) 362.

TROVER AND CONVERSION.

Conversion by officer seizing and selling exempt property, see Exemptions, § 139.

II. ACTIONS.

(D) Damages.

§ 44. The general rule is that in trover the measure of damages is the value of the property, with interest (in the discretion of the jury) from the time of its conversion.—Winstead v. Hicks (Ky.) 1018.

I. CREATION, EXISTENCE, AND VALIDITY.

(A) Express Trusts.

§§ 17, 18. A parol agreement of the grantee in a conveyance of land to hold it for the use and in trust for the one furnishing the consideration is valid and not within the statute of frauds.—Smith v. Smith (Ky.) 1002.

§ 25. At common law a use or trust was not required to be declared in any particular way.—Smith v. Smith (Ky.) 1002.

§ 41. In an action on secured notes the burden of showing that a trust to resell the property was different from that shown by the notes and mortgage was upon defendant.—Forsythe v. Lexington Banking & Trust Co. (Ky.) 962.

(B) Resulting Trusts.

§ 63. Though under Ky. St. § 2353 (Russell's St. § 2050), resulting trusts are abolished, the grantee in a conveyance is nevertheless liable to those contributing the purchase money, as for money had and received; the status of the parties being that of trustee and cestui que trust under an express trust.—Smith v. Smith (Ky.) 1002.

§ 72. A "resulting trust" is one arising on the naked fact that one furnishes the consideration, while the title is taken to another, a stranger, without an agreement as to the use or trust.—Smith v. Smith (Ky.) 1002.

(C) Constructive Trusts.

§ 95. Where the legal title to property has been obtained through actual fraud, equity impresses a constructive trust on the property in favor of the one equitably entitled thereto.—Bragg v. Hartney (Ark.) 1059.

§ 95. A constructive trust held created in favor of the heirs of one who paid the price of trust to administer complete justice.—Gilliean v. Witherspoon (Tex. Civ. App.) 909.

VII. ESTABLISHMENT AND ENFORCEMENT OF TRUST.

(A) Rights of Cestui Que Trust as against Trustee.

§ 336. If a verbal trust to convey property on certain terms was legal, the beneficiary must enforce it according to the terms of the agreement, and cannot enforce the trust as he thinks it should have been established by the agreement.—Forsythe v. Lexington Banking & Trust Co. (Ky.) 962.

(B) Right to Follow Trust Property or Proceeds Thereof.

§ 349. Where the legal title to property has been obtained through actual fraud, equity impresses a constructive trust on the property and may reach it in the hands of the wrongdoer or a subsequent holder.—Bragg v. Hartney (Ark.) 1059.

§ 358. No change in the form of trust property will prevent the beneficiary from reaching it if it can be identified as a distinct fund or specifically separated.—McCormick v. McCormick's Adm'r (Ky.) 450.

(B) As to Third Persons in General.

Operation against vendee of estoppel against vendor, see Estoppel, § 98.

(C) Bona Fide Purchasers.

§ 230. A railroad company's successor held charged with notice of its predecessor's covenant in a deed to construct a station on land conveyed to it for a right of way.—Louisville, H. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Baskett (Ky.) 957.

§ 230. A deed executed under a power of attorney authorizing sale of heirs' interest in estate of their grandfather held to pass the entire interest of heirs in community property of erty from defendants to discover whether it was community property unless they had notice of that fact; defendants being heirs.—Merrill v. Bradley (Tex. Civ. App.) 561.

VI. REMEDIES OF VENDOR.

(A) Lien and Recovery of Land.

Right of subrogation by party paying note for purchase price, see Subrogation, § 27.

§ 251. Vendor's intention to retain the superior title should be given effect where it can be gathered from the language used.—Lipscomb v. Fuqua (Tex. Civ. App.) 193.

§ 280. A variance between the petition and the proof held corrected by the subsequent pleadings justifying a judgment foreclosing a contract lien.—Melton v. Beasley (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 296. Instrument held not to vest the absolute title to the land in the purchaser, with an implied lien only for the unpaid purchase money, but to show an intent that the superior title should remain in vendor until full performance by the purchaser.—Lipscomb v. Fuqua (Tex. Civ. App.) 193.

(B) Actions for Purchase Money.

§ 308. A purchaser, who has received a conveyance with warranty and has been put in possession, cannot resist payment because of a defective title, unless vendor is insolvent, or a nonresident, or has practiced actual fraud.—Atkinson v. Hager (Ky.) 955.

§ 315. In an action by heirs to recover the price of lands conveyed by their ancestor, evidence held to support a finding that the actual consideration was different from that recited in the deed, and that it was not paid.—Stamper v. Cornett (Ky.) 623.

VII. REMEDIES OF PURCHASER.

Refusal to accept incumbered title as waiver of right to specific performance, see Specific Performance, § 7.

WATERS AND WATER COURSES.

VIII. ARTIFICIAL PONDS, RESERVOIRS, AND CHANNELS, DAMS, AND FLOWAGE.

§ 171. In an action against a railroad for causing obstruction of water of a creek by a bridge, an instruction making its liability depend on whether the bridge obstructed water to a greater extent than an old one held not the issue which should have been submitted.—Southern Ry. Co. v. A. M. E. Church's Trustees of Harrodsburg (Ky.) 972.

§ 178. Where, at the time of suit against a railroad for flooding land, it has depreciated by reason thereof, the owners may recover for such depreciation, though they do not sue for future damages.—Madisonville, H. & E. R. Co. v. Gatton (Ky.) 640.

§ 178. A verdict of $200 against a railroad for diverting a water course and overflowing land held not so palpably against the evidence or excessive as to indicate passion or prejudice.—Madisonville, H. & E. R. Co. v. Gatton (Ky.) 640.

§ 178. Rule stated as to the damages recoverable for obstructing water of a creek by a bridge on a railroad, where only two overflows, occurring some months apart and lasting only a short time, are complained of.—Southern Ry. Co. v. A. M. E. Church's Trustees of Harrodsburg (Ky.) 972.

IX. PUBLIC WATER SUPPLY.

II. TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

§ 50. "Testamentary capacity" defined.—Watson's Ex'r v. Watson (Ky.) 626.

§ 52. The burden of proving testamentary incapacity held to shift to contestant on proponent's proof of execution, and in the absence of intrinsic evidence of incapacity.—Watson's Ex'r v. Watson (Ky.) 626.

§ 53. In a proceeding to probate a will contested on the ground of testamentary incapacity and undue influence, evidence of proceedings six months after the execution of the will resulting in a judgment finding testator mentally incompetent to manage his estate held inadmissible.—Watson's Ex'r v. Watson (Ky.) 626.

§ 55. In a will contest, evidence held to support a finding that testator was mentally incompetent to make a will.—Gallagher v. Neilon (Tex. Civ. App.) 564.

IV. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(A) Nature and Essentials of Testamentary Dispositions.

§ 88. An instrument to take effect only upon grantor's death held testamentary in character and insufficient as a deed.—Givens v. Ott (Mo.) 23.

(F) Mistake, Undue Influence, and Fraud.

§ 155. "Undue influence" defined.—Watson's Ex'r v. Watson (Ky.) 626.

§ 155. Undue influence is a species of fraud.—Gallagher v. Neilon (Tex. Civ. App.) 564.

§ 156. Where testator's mind was so impaired by disease, old age, or mental anguish as to render him an easy dupe to the acts and intrigues of those by whom he was surrounded, and that the will, by which he made a different disposition of the property from what he otherwise would have done, was procured by taking advantage of his condition, the will will not be admitted to probate.—Gallagher v. Neilon (Tex. Civ. App.) 564.

V. PROBATE, ESTABLISHMENT, AND ANNULMENT.

(H) Evidence.

§ 300. Where in a will contest undue influence and lack of testamentary capacity are charged, any issue arising under any phase of the case may be established or disproved by direct or circumstantial evidence.—Gallagher v. Neilon (Tex. Civ. App.) 564.

(I) Hearing or Trial.

Requests for instructions, see Trial, § 260.

§ 324. In proceedings to probate a will, the submission to the jury of the question whether testator executed the will, and the question of the genuineness of the signature thereto, held erroneous.—Watson's Ex'r v. Watson (Ky.) 626.

§ 324. In a will contest, the questions of testamentary capacity and of undue influence or fraud exerted over testator in procuring a will are questions of fact, to be determined by the jury from all the facts and circumstances of the case.—Gallagher v. Neilon (Tex. Civ. App.) 564.

§ 332. In a will contest, a charge held not on the weight of evidence as giving undue prominence to a certain phrase repeated in several paragraphs of the charge.—Gallagher v. Neilon (Tex. Civ. App.) 564.

(K) Review.

§ 359. Under Ky. St. 1909, § 1404 (Russell's St. § 3947), a widow renouncing her husband's will, and electing to take under the law, held not entitled to appeal from the order probating the will.—Thompson v. Thompson (Ky.) 641.

§ 364. Under Ky. St. 1909, § 4830 (Russell's St. § 3976), and Civ. Code Prac. §§ 738, 740, 758, an appeal taken from a judgment probating a will after the lapse of more than one year will be dismissed if no application was made to extend the time.—Williamson v. Maynard (Ky.) 967.

Digitized by Google

§ 371½. The limitation in Ky. St. 1909, § 4850 (Russell's St. § 3976), held available on motion made at or before the case is submitted on the merits.—Williamson v. Maynard (Ky.) 967.

VI. CONSTRUCTION.

(A) General Rules.

§ 490. Rule as to admissibility of parol evidence to show intent of testatrix to devise property not belonging to her, so as to require an election by the devisee, stated.—McDonald v. Shaw (Ark.) 935.

(C) Survivorship, Representation, and Substitution.

§ 548. A provision, that the share of any child in remainder who died without children should go to the other children, held to refer to death without issue before the death of the life tenant.—Garrard v. Kendall (Ky.) 997.

§ 552. Under Ky. St. §§ 2064, 4841 (Russell's St. §§ 3841, 3964), held, that a will must be construed to mean "sisters" as a class, which being the case, the devise was controlled by section 4841, and the descendants of a half-sister of testator, dead when the will was made, took the estate she would have taken.—Barnhill v. Sharon (Ky.) 983.

(E) Nature of Estates and Interests Created.

§ 597. In case of doubt, the law favors the fee rather than a lesser estate.—Garrard v. Kendall (Ky.) 997.

§ 601. Under a devise giving the property to testator's wife to use as she saw fit, his wife held to take a fee notwithstanding a subsequent provision giving any remainder to testator's children.—Garrard v. Kendall (Ky.) 997.

§ 602. A will construed, and held not to provide for testator's grandchildren.—Smith v. Phelps (Ky.) 656.

§ 607. A will construed, and held to create an estate tail, converted by Ky. St. 1909, § 2343 (Russell's St. § 2045), into a fee.—Taggart's Ex'r v. Taggart (Ky.) 693.

§ 607. A will construed, and held to give to testator's children the fee in the one-third devised to the widow for life.—Taggart's Ex'r v. Taggart (Ky.) 693.

§ 614. A will construed, and held to give testator's widow a life estate only.—Taggart's Ex'r v. Taggart (Ky.) 693.

§ 616. A will held to give the widow a life estate, so that she would have only such estate in property purchased with the proceeds of property sold by her which belonged to the estate.—McCormick v. McCormick's Adm'r (Ky.) 450.

(F) Vested or Contingent Estates and Interests.

§ 629. The law favors the vesting of estates.—Garrard v. Kendall (Ky.) 997.

§ 634. Will construed, and held to pass to M. and testator's daughter vested remainders.—Hackney v. Tucker (Ky.) 417.

§ 634. A life estate and remainder will be held vested where it can be fairly done without too great violence to the language used.—Hackney v. Tucker (Ky.) 417.

§ 634. That an estate is to take effect after the termination of an intervening estate will not prevent both estates from vesting at the same moment.—Hackney v. Tucker (Ky.) 417.

(I) Actions to Construe Wills.

§ 697. Equity will not entertain a suit to construe a will brought by persons who have no interest therein.—Garrard v. Kendall (Ky.) 997.

VII. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF DEVISEES AND LEGATEES.

(A) Nature of Title and Rights in General.

§ 725. The owner of both the legal and equitable title to funds that would arise from the sale of real estate under the direction of a will may, if he so elect, under the doctrine of equitable conversion and reconversion, take the real estate itself.—Givens v. Ott (Mo.) 23.

§ 744. A mortgagee of a devisee's interest held bound to take notice of the public records containing the will, and to be charged with knowledge of a prior lien note executed by the devisee to equalize his mother's share under the will.—Montgomery's Trustee v. Brown (Ky.) 472.

(C) Advancements, Ademption, Satisfaction, and Lapse.

§ 758. Though an advancement is not a debt, testator may impose the payment thereof as a condition of the receipt of a share of the estate by the person advanced.—Montgomery's Trustee v. Brown (Ky.) 472.

§ 759. A provision charging a devisee with an advancement held equivalent to requiring him to account for the sum specified in the settlement of the estate.—Montgomery's Trustee v. Brown (Ky.) 472.

§ 759. The term "advancement" used in a devise held to have been used in its popular, and not in its technical, sense.—Montgomery's Trustee v. Brown (Ky.) 472.

§ 762. Mode of settlement of an estate under a will devising testator's property specifically to his wife and two children stated.—Montgomery's Trustee v. Brown (Ky.) 472.

§ 762. An estate having been completely settled without payment of a devisee's note given to equalize his mother's share, it would be presumed that his interest in the residuary estate was insufficient to pay the note.—Montgomery's Trustee v. Brown (Ky.) 472.

§ 775. Under Ky. St. 1909, § 4843 (Russell's St. § 3966), property devised to one who died before testator passed at testator's death as if no will had been made.—Garrard v. Kendall (Ky.) 997.

(D) Election.

§ 778. Doctrine of election in equity stated.—McDonald v. Shaw (Ark.) 935.

§ 786. Court held not required to make an election for an incompetent person.—McDonald v. Shaw (Ark.) 935.

§ 800. Basis of the doctrine of election being that a person cannot assume two inconsistent positions and accept and reject under the same instrument, a person in making an election can be required to give up that which is his own only to the extent that it is necessary to relieve his position of inconsistency.—McDonald v. Shaw (Ark.) 935.

(H) Void, Lapsed, and Forfeited Devises and Bequests, and Property and Interests Undisposed of.

§ 858. Under will, held that, a beneficiary having refused to accept a bequest, it passed under the residuary clause.—Givens v. Ott (Mo.) 23.

I. ATTENDANCE, PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS, AND COMPENSATION.

§ 32. A witness in a civil case held not entitled to have his fees for attendance and mileage taxed against the losing party unless he proves his account in compliance with Kirby's Dig. § 3254.—Lansing Wheelbarrow Co. v. Montgomery (Ark.) 1052.

§ 32. Kirby's Dig. § 3524, requiring the accounts of witnesses to be sworn to, held not subject to abrogation by a customer of reporting verbally to the clerk the number of days' attendance.—Lansing Wheelbarrow Co. v. Montgomery (Ark.) 1052.

II. COMPETENCY.

(A) Capacity and Qualifications in General.

§ 48. Under Ky. St. 1909, § 1180 (Russell's St. § 3714), held that accused on trial for murder who had previously been convicted of false swearing was disqualified from testifying in his own behalf notwithstanding Cr. Code Prac. § 223, subd. 1.—Hinton v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 434.

(C) Testimony of Parties or Persons Interested, for or against Representatives, Survivors, or Successors in Title or Interest of Persons Deceased or Incompetent.

§ 139. Under the express provisions of Civ. Code Prac. § 606, witnesses are incompetent to testify for themselves as to conversations of persons deceased.—Stamper v. Cornett (Ky.) 623.

§ 140. Civ. Code Prac. § 606, held not to prevent an agent from testifying for his principal as to transactions with the agent of another, although the latter agent is dead at the time of giving such testimony.—Paducah Cooperage Co. v. Paducah Veneer & Lumber Co. (Ky.) 386.

§ 140. Civ. Code Prac. § 606, subsec. 2, clearly recognizes the right of persons interested in an estate to testify for its protection, and hence a devisee may testify in favor of the executor sued for a wrongful act of the testator.—Ratliff v. Daniel's Ex'r (Ky.) 1034.

§ 142. A cashier of, and stockholder in, a bank was incompetent to testify for the bank as to a transaction with a person since deceased.—Farmers' Bank of Wickliffe v. Wickliffe (Ky.) 498.

§ 145. Plaintiff, in foreclosure held not disqualified to testify by reason of being an heir and representative of the deceased mortgagee.—Blair v. Breeding (Tex. Civ. App.) 869.

§ 150. Under Civ. Code Prac. § 606, subd. 2, certain testimony as to an oral agreement between defendant and plaintiff's deceased grantor held inadmissible in an action to recover possession.—Howell v. Salt Lick Lumber Co. (Ky.) 645.

§ 158. Testimony of an indemnitor respecting time of signing of contract held admissible, though the person against whose debt they were indemnifying was dead; Civ. Code Prac. § 606, not being applicable.—Wright v. Hawes (Ky.) 611.

§ 159. A debtor held incompetent to testify against the executors of his creditor to a transaction in which he made a partial payment on the debt.—Million v. Million's Ex'rs (Ky.) 985.

§ 178. Notwithstanding the instrument sued on was a transaction with a decedent, within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2302, yet defendant, having been called by decedent's administrator to testify as to a part of the transaction, should have been permitted to testify to the whole of it.—Watson v. Dodson (Tex. Civ. App.) 209.

(D) Confidential Relations and Privileged Communications.

§ 199. A statement of facts, made to an attorney with the view of employing him, is privileged, though the suit was not brought by him.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Duncan (Tex. Civ. App.) 362.

§ 202. Evidence of an attorney that deeds executed by his clients were in fraud of creditors of the grantor held not privileged.—Stone v. Stitt (Tex. Civ. App.) 187.

III. EXAMINATION.

Harmless error, see Criminal, Law, § 1170½.
Review of discretionary rulings, see Appeal and Error, § 971.

(A) Taking Testimony in General.

§ 230. Where witnesses testify through an interpreter, a greater latitude may be allowed in their examination.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 552.

§ 243. That a question asked plaintiff was leading held not ground for its exclusion.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Teague (Ky.) 484.

(B) Cross-Examination and Re-examination.

§ 268. Cross-examination held not confined to a categorical review of matters stated on direct examination.—State v. Myers (Mo.) 131.

§ 275. Where, in an action for injuries, plaintiff testified that prior to the accident he earned from $5,000 to $7,000 per annum, defendant on cross-examination was entitled to show that in fact plaintiff was poor.—Pecos & N. T. R. Co. v. Coffman (Tex. Civ. App.) 218.

§ 275. A party testifying in his own behalf should not be required to express on cross-examination his opinion of the truth of the testimony of a witness contradicting his testimony.—Temple v. Duran (Tex. Civ. App.) 253.

§ 277. Certain cross-examination of accused held properly permitted.—State v. Myers (Mo.) 131.

(C) Privilege of Witness.

§ 297. Under Bill of Rights, art. 1, § 10, and Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 4, a witness held not guilty of contempt in refusing to answer certain questions asked by the grand jury and tending to incriminate him.—Ex parte Hughes (Tex. Cr. App.) 1118.

IV. CREDIBILITY, IMPEACHMENT, CONTRADICTION, AND CORROBORATION.

(A) In General.

§ 317. The jury, believing that a witness has sworn falsely in part and truthfully in part, should reject the portion which they believe to be false, and accept the portion they believe to be true.—Pickett v. State (Ark.) 732.

§ 321. A party calling a witness vouches for his credibility.—Lewis v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1090.

§ 329. In a prosecution for rape, certain evidence held properly received as cross-examination of one of defendant's witnesses.—Sexton v. State (Ark.) 1075.

(B) Character and Conduct of Witness.

§ 337. In a prosecution for homicide, certain evidence held incompetent to impeach defendant, who was a witness for himself.—Ware v. State (Ark.) 927.

Digitized by Google

§ 340. Evidence that the general reputation of a witness for chastity was bad was competent to impeach her.—Lane v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 486.

§ 344. In a prosecution for burglary, certain evidence to impeach a witness held inadmissible.—Railey v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 1120.

§ 350. In a prosecution for manslaughter, certain examination of accused held competent to show his motive for testimony and to affect his credibility.—Davis v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 1108.

(C) Interest and Bias of Witness.

§ 369. Where a former conductor on defendant's railroad had given strong testimony against plaintiff in an injury action, it was permissible to show on his cross-examination, to affect his credibility, that he had been discharged by defendant for drunkenness and had an application in for reinstatement.—Gordon v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. (Mo.) 80.

§ 372. Certain cross-examination held proper.—Gordon v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. (Mo.) 80.

(D) Inconsistent Statements by Witness.

§ 379. Certain testimony held admissible to impeach a witness.—Gordon v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. (Mo.) 80.

§ 388. In a homicide case, certain testimony held not justified as contradicting accused.—Wilson v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 430.

§ 389. A statement of defendant's witness contradictory of his testimony, held not on a collateral matter, and therefore admissible to impeach him.—Tate v. State (Ark.) 737.

(E) Contradiction and Corroboration of Witness.

§ 398. Witnesses, testifying to threats made by accused cannot, in the absence of the laying of a proper foundation, be impeached by certain proof.—State v. Heath (Mo.) 149.
